EXECUTOR'S NOTICE TO CREDI- TORS.

In the estate of Julia Ann Symington, deceased.

Notice is hereby given pursuant to Chapter 26 of the Statutes of Ontario, 1911, Section 53 and Amending Acts, that all persons having any claims or demands against the estate of Julia Ann Symington, late of the Town of Napanee, in the County of Lennox and Addington, married woman, deceased, who died on or about the 18th day of March, A. D. 1913, are required to deliver or send by post prepaid to T. B. GERMAN, Napanee, Ontario, solicitor for said T. B. German, executor of the last will and testament of the said Julia Ann Symington, deceased, on or before the 15th day of August,
A. D. 1913, their christian and surnames, addresses and descriptions, with full particulars of their claims or demands duly verified, and the nature of the security (if any) held by them.
And further take notice that after the said 15th day of August, A. D. 1913, the said executor may proceed to distribute the assets of the said estate amongst the persons entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims or demands of which he shall then have received notice, and shall not be liable for the said assets, or any part thereof so distributed, to any person or persons of whose claims or demands he shall not have received notice at the time of the distribution thereof.

T. B. GERMAN,

Solicitor for the said Executor.

J. Murray Wilson, principal of Pictou public school, has resigned and accepted the principalship of Prince Albert, Sask., at $1,600, increasing in two years to $2,000.

The late Michael Keenan, who died in Rochester, N. Y., a few days ago, left over $17,000, which will be divided among relatives. He at one time resided near Erinsville.

John McKendry, of Marysville, who has been a patient in the Hotel Dieu, Kingston, for the past two months, on account of having his right leg poisoned, is steadily improving.

Arthur A. Holland, B. Sc., who went to South America last autumn to report on some mining properties, has returned, and is now visiting in Napanee. He was in Kingston on Monday.

Determined that her child should live, Mrs. J. H. Spaulding, of Los Angeles, Cal., kept her six-weeks-old baby alive for three days by artificial respiration produced by her own lips.

A sudden death occurred in the Kingston hospital on Saturday morning, when Mrs. George Boyce, of Harrow-smith, passed to rest. The deceased had been ailing for two weeks. She is survived by her husband and a number of children.

Because he never missed writing a letter to his mother each week of the fifteen years he has been in America,
J. W. Gordon, a tailor of East St.
Louis, is heir to $500,000, left by his bachelor uncle, L. Liebowitz, of Labau, Kuhland, Russia, according to a letter
he received recently.

Belleville firemen are meeting with much success in the circulation of the lists about the city, asking for sub-

Climbing out of a grand stand while a game was in progress between Haileybury and Liskeard, Magistrate Wilson held court and sentenced a man on a disorderly charge, in a booth under the grand stand, and got back in time to see his home team win the victory, the magistrate missing only part of one inning.

BELL ROCK.

There were some fine rain showers here last week which improved the pasture very much.

J. Pomeroy, who was seriously ill last week is improving.

Mrs. Walker is also on the sick list. A shade of gloom was cast over the neighborhood last Friday, by the death of a highly respected resident, George M. Sanborn, post master of the village. The funeral service was held in the Methodist church on Sunday conducted by Mrs. S. Gowdy of the Society of friends.

Miss May Yorke and Miss Ila Percy, Kingston, made a short visit at their respective homes here.

Visitors: Lorne A. Sanborn, Fort Greble, Rhode Island; George E. Sanborn, Syracuse, N. Y., and Miss Oliva Sanborn, Toronto, at their mother's, Mrs. G. M. Sanborn's.

kin, carpenter, 379 Princess street, Kingston, was found dead in the drive shed at the rear of his father's home, on Monday morning, shortly after six o'clock. Coroner A. E. Ross, who was summoned, stated that death was due to a revolver accidentally exploding and the bullet entering the side of the head.

On Sunday afternoon Belleville was visited by a severe thunderstorm. During its progress a barn belonging to William Thompson, in Thurlow Township was struck by lightning and burned with its contents. A team of valuable horses were cremated. The loss is about $2000, partially covered by insurance.

The Kingston Whig says: "A company is being formed to build a new boat to run from Indian Cove and Fredericksburg to Picton. The boat is calculated not to be larger than the Reindeer, a boat which has made wonderful success of this route and made a good deal for the owners, and was built by the captain, Robert Davis of Kingston, twenty-eight years ago. The boat is to have a capacity of 150 passengers, and is to be equipped in the most modern style."

At Binghampton, N. Y., sixty persons were killed, according to late estimates, and as many injured, a dozen of them mortally, in a fire which swept a four-story building of the Binghampton Clothing Company Tuesday afternoon. The victims were chiefly women and girls. Some two score persons are known to have escaped, as by a miracle, from the building, which burst into flames like a tinder box and became a roaring furnace almost in no time after the first alarm was sounded. About 125 persons were in the factory when the fire broke out. The unaccounted for, or most of them, are believed to be still in the red hot ruins.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber, July 21st. 1913.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor W. A. Steacy in the chair.

Present—Reeve Osborne and Councillors Dickinson, Walters, Graham and Simpson.

The minutes of the last regular and special sessions were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from W. G. Wilson, County Clerk, advising that the County Council, at its June session, equalized the assessment of this municipality at $800,000. At a rate of five mills on the dollar for general and incidental purposes the town has to pay a County rate of $4000. Communication filed.

As per a statement from the Northern Crown Bank, at the end of June, the corporation was indebted to that institution to the amount of $23,102.27. Filed.

Street Commissioner Lowry, who is in charge of the work of repairing Robin Hill road, reported that the amount of money contributed by the Township of North Fredericksburgh, the County Council and the Town of Napanee, was insufficient to complete the work, and asked for further instructions.

Councillors Carson and Alexander entered and took their seats at the Board.

Moved by Councillors Dickinson and Graham, that this Council signify its willingness to contribute one-third of the extra amount required to complete the repair of the York road, provided the Township of North Fredericksburgh and the County Council also contribute one-third of the amount. Carried.

W. H. Miller, of Bardolph, offered the sum of $75.00 for the buildings on the town property on the west side of Centre street, on the lands which are to be used for a drill hall site.

Tender ordered filed.

Mr. H. Milling addressed the Council in reference to the question of a public abattoir. To-day the several butchers in town are practically without a place wherein to do their killing, and furthermore, such places as are being used, through absolute necessity, are in such an unsanitary condition that if people only knew it they would positively refuse to eat the meat killed in these places. Mr. Milling said: "Don't believe what I tell you, but go and look for yourselves." Something had to be done, and that immediately. If the Council would not take action and erect a public abattoir, he would be compelled to make arrangements suitable for his own purposes.

The question was discussed to some considerable length by the different members of the Council but nothing definite resulted. Financially the town this year is not in a position to undertake any extra expenditures, but it was suggested that the town lease to any one, who would erect a sanitary building suit-

not take action and erect a public abbatoir, he would be compelled to make arrangements suitable for his own purposes.

The question was discussed to some considerable length by the different members of the Council but nothing definite resulted. Financially the town this year is not in a position to undertake any extra expenditures, but it was suggested that the town lease to any one, who would erect a sanitary building suitable for the purposes of the butchers sufficient land south of the disposal works on the river bank.

The question was finally referred to the Poor and Sanitary Committee to investigate and report.

Moved by Coun. Dickinson, seconded by Coun. Graham, that immediately after the completion of the work now being done on the Roblin Hill road, Commissioner Lowry proceed with the work of tearing down the

PURITY and QUALITY

These two essentials explain the great increase in demand for our bread since the installation of our new electrical bread mixer.

We have now a thoroughly up-to-date and sanitary bread plant, including bread mixer, sanitary steel troughs, etc. As a result we are able to place before the public a pure, clean wholesome, smooth-grained loaf of bread.

We ask all housewives who desire purity and quality in their bread to try a loaf of this bread and be convinced of its superiority.

ELOPEMENT IN AIR.

Pretty French Girl Flew Away With an Aviator.

PARIS, July 22.—An elopement by aeroplane, which has yet some of the features of an old-time elopement, is reported from Niort, in the department of Deux Sevres. Two months ago a good-looking young airman was giving an exhibition of flights at Niort, when a prepossessing governess fell in love with him and begged him to take her up in the aeroplane. A few days later the airman eloped with her in his machine. They did not descend until they reached Issy, 250 miles away. The girl's father has now lodged a complaint against the airman, whom he accuses of abducting his daughter and detaining her against her will. The governess, when she appeared before the police commissary, said she eloped with the airman of her own free will, and declared she would be eternally grateful to him for flying away with her. She added that she was of age and was free to do as she pleased. The father's complaint was dismissed.

MILITANT RECAPTURED

Mrs. Pankhurst Taken After a Fierce Struggle With Women.

Suffragette Leader, Who Cleverly Evaded the London Police on Sunday, Appears at Mass Meeting and When Police Seize Her a Bitter Fight Rages—Rescue Attempted in Taxi.

LONDON, July 22.—The police captured the real Mrs. Pankhurst yesterday afternoon, who was safely lodged in Holloway Jail after a series of exciting incidents. As rumored, Mrs. Pankhurst had planned another dramatic appearance at the Pavilion Theatre at the weekly suffragette meeting. Eleven militants were arrested in the Pavilion early in the day, and later the detectives kept vigil without expecting her to appear. The hope of sensational developments drew large crowds from the surrounding thoroughfares. The police had the greatest difficulty securing a passage for traffic. The hall itself was packed with militants, who before the opening of the meeting sat with ill-concealed impatience until the expected storm broke.

When Mrs. Pankhurst left an adjoining room and proceeded along the side of the balcony towards the platform she was immediately recognized, and a long storm of cheering broke out. The police inspector and a dozen policemen followed close behind Mrs. Pankhurst. They overtook her, and requested her to go with them. Immediately there was a scene of wildest confusion. The audience rose shrieking, booing and yelling. The men shook formidable sticks and the women made a rush at the police amid shouts of "Rescue." Women in all parts of the theatre appealed to Mrs. Mansell, who was in the chair, in an endeavor to prevent the arrest.

"Why do you not rescue Mrs. Pankhurst?" a female voice screamed. "Mrs. Pankhurst came here only to challenge the authorities. She has come to say, 'Take me back to prison if you dare.' Her policy is not to escape, but to continue fighting," was the answer.

The police inspector and his colleagues were struck again and again by the women, who kicked and struggled. One report says that the inspector had a narrow escape, being throttled and thrown to the ground. A detective had to use a heavy stick before the police could tear the women's hands from his throat. Battles with the police were also raging in the entrance to the hall, but finally the police were victorious, and bore Mrs. Pankhurst away, together with six others, including Major Fisher and Mrs. Marshall, wife of the solicitor to the Women's Social and Political Union. The latter was charged with assaulting the police, the others with obstructing.

Mrs. Pankhurst, when arrested, resolutely refused to walk. She was carried to a taxicab by the police and driven to Holloway. There was an exciting pursuit of the police taxicab by a taxi containing suffragettes. Whenever the former was checked, the inspector thrust his head through the window. The route was immediately cleared. The police taxi entered Holloway in almost record time, just at the moment the suffragettes' taxi reached the gates. Mrs. Pankhurst refused to leave the vehicle and was carried bodily into the prison.

WARNING TO TURKEY.

Asquith Says Her Defiance of Treaty Will Cost Dear.

BIRMINGHAM, July 22.—The Prime Minister characterized the spectacle presented by the Balkan states as "disheartening and repellent" in a speech at the Chamber of Commerce century banquet here last night. On the one hand, he said, were the Balkan states drenching with one another's blood the territory their united efforts had freed from Turkish rule; on the other hand, Turkey, disregarding the Treaty of London, on which the ink was scarcely dry, and taking advantage of the differences between her late enemies to recover her lost territory.

The powers, continued Mr. Asquith, were doing everything possible to bring the disputants to a peaceful conference. To-day it seemed likely that such a conference would take place.

"We believe," he added, "that it must result in the immediate suspension of arms and a speedy settlement, upon the terms of which with a view to what has happened, the great powers must and will preserve their own judgment."

The Prime Minister warned Turkey that if she were ill-advised enough to set the provisions of the Treaty of London at defiance she must be prepared for the introduction of questions which it would be by no means to her interest to bring into the debate.

Squads of police defeated the efforts of suffragettes to mob Premier Asquith by clearing the streets in the neighborhood of the banquet hall before he entered. Hostile crowds chased the suffragettes wherever seen, forcing them to take refuge in shops and offices. The women, however, succeeded in smashing several windows of the hotel where Mr. Asquith is staying. Six of them were arrested.

ST. CATHARINES, July 22.—The building of a fast electric line from Hamilton through St. Catharines to the Niagara river, by the C.P.R., was proposed by E. N. Todd, division freight agent, to the city council yester- day afternoon.

The city is asked to contribute one half of the cost of a railway bridge across the old canal. As an alterna- tive proposition, the C.P.R. is willing to use a bridge jointly with the Cana- dian Northern, which also intends to build through St. Catharines. In such a case the C.P.R. would pay one-third of the cost and expect the Canadian Northern and the city to bear similar proportions. The through line would be built through the northern section of St. Catharines, with a spur line to a new station to be erected at the mar- ket square. j

The City Council looks favorably upon the proposition and will take up the new proposal with the Canadian Northern.

MR BORDEN'S SOPHISTRY

TRIED TO ALLY BRITISH NAVAL PROGRAMME WITH HIS EMERGENCY PHANTASM.

On the very last day of last session of parliament, Mr. Borden made a strenuous effort to excuse his course with regard to Imperial Naval Defence, and to delude the people of Canada into the belief that because the Canadian parliament had rejected his Imperial tribute proposition, the Imperial government had been compelled to build three new ships to take the place of those Canada had refused. This was a piece of sophistry in keeping with Mr. Borden's whole course since the Nationalists made him drop the Laurier naval programme, which had been approved by the Admiralty as well as by himself and the unanimous vote of parliament, and attempted to put through some new scheme whose ultimate result would be the reduction of Canada to a state of Imperial vassalage so far as naval defence was concerned.

Fortunately, Mr. Borden was not able to "put it over" the Canadian people in this way. The hollowness of his argument was exposed in Parliament and also in Great Britain, where the very people Mr. Borden would regard as his own best friends—the Imperial Navy League; have punctured his theories completely.

Mr. Borden said: "The tax bearers of the British Isles are to be called upon to pay for three Dreadnoughts which are to be laid down in place of those that should have been furnished by Canada under the provisions of the Naval Aid Bill."

Mr. Borden proceeded—"It is quite out of the question for us at the moment to make any advance or approach to the Imperial authorities," and concluded, "Canada will take over and pay for and acquire these three ships and will place them at the disposal of His Majesty the King for the common defence of the great empire of which Canada forms a part."

WHAT "THE NAVY" SAYS.

"The Navy," the organ of the British Navy League—an organization formed for the express purpose of demanding that Great Britain build a navy of a standard double the strength of that of any other nation—in its current issue discusses the situation created Navy" "That the solution of Canada's part of the problem rests with Canada alone." It would be better for the empire if Mr. Borden would find out from the Canadian people what they really desire instead of continually trying to find out from Mr. Churchill what the admiralty prefers and then attempting to force this upon the Canadian people.

MR. CHURCHILL'S DENIAL.

That Mr. Borden's statements were completely false was shown to the world as recently as July 17th by no less an authority than Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty. Discussing the shipbuilding vote in the Imperial House of Commons, Mr. Churchill said emphatically that "The British admiralty has no intention of adding further warships to its construction program for 1914-15."

Mr. Churchill further said he knew of nothing in the international situation necessitating such an increase nor anything that would require Great Britain to depart from her present programme.

The only result of the failure of Mr. Borden's Naval Bill, said Mr. Churchill, would be to accelerate to construction of three war ships.

Mr. Churchill expressed the opinion that there was an overwhelming consensus of opinion in Canada that early action should be taken in one form or another. Since the Canadian Parliament in 1909 unanimously supported the Laurier proposition for a Canadian fleet as part of the Imperial navy, Mr. Churchill was on perfectly safe ground there, and, as on previous occasions he expressed no preference for either the constructive policy of Laurier, or the tribute policy of Borden.

STILL APPEALING TO PASSION.

TORIES CONTINUE INFLAMMATORY CAMPAIGN WITH ONTARIO PROTESTANTS.

It was made plain in several speeches throughout Ontario on the 12th of July that the Tories intend to continue their double-barrelled tactics of last election. This time, however, they have been compelled to come out into the open, so their campaign of calumny and insinuation will be less dangerous. While trying to continue as far as possible their alliance with the Nationalists in Quebec, they are still endeavouring to use the Eucharistic Congress and the Ne Temere Decree as stock ammunition in Ontario.

This was emphasized by a speech

TRICKY ANIMALS.

Some Are Simply Fakers, While Others Are Real Criminals.

"There are crooks among animals, just as among men," said a nature student. "Take, for example, the horse. A horse looks very noble, very honest, eh? Yet time and again a horse will feign lameness in one leg or the other because he knows that when he's lame his boss will let him loaf.

"One responsible writer tells about a chimpanzee that they once fed on cake and wine when he had a cold. The rascal fakes up a bad cough in the hope of getting more wine and cake.

"Many birds are tricky and some are notorious thieves, particularly the raven and the crow. But the cuckoo is the worst. The cuckoo is too flighty a lady to be willing to sit in a nest and hatch out eggs, so she lays in the nests of other birds, one here and one there, and, by Jove, to complete the deception she abstracts an egg from the nest she lays in so that the addition of her own egg won't be noticed.

"A criminal—not a common crook—is the Australian parrot. Once a vegetarian, this foul bird now lights on a sheep's back and, standing where the sheep cannot reach him, he hacks his way down to the liver, which he eats. Sheep murdered by parrots for their liver constitute one of the grave losses of Australian farming." — New York Tribune.

FOREIGN BORN WOMEN.

How They May Become Naturalized, Married or Single.

A foreign born unmarried woman may become a citizen by being naturalized. To do this she must be twenty-one years of age and have lived five years in this country, one full year of which has been lived in the state in which she makes her application. Or she can marry a man who is a citizen, for the wife's citizenship follows the husband, and she continues to retain her citizenship if she continues to reside in the United States, unless she renounces the sovereignty of the United States.

A foreign born woman living in the United States whose husband is a foreigner, who refuses to become naturalized, cannot become a citizen unless separated from him by divorce or death.

A native born woman who marries a foreigner loses her citizenship during the time of the married relation, but upon the death of her husband or divorce from him she may resume her citizenship by registering, within one year with the American consul in the country of her residence a declaration that she desires to do so, or she may resume it by returning to the United States to reside.—New York Post.

A War Trick of the Great Hannibal.

When Hannibal, the great Carthaginian, was fighting Eumenes of Pergamos with a fleet of very inferior strength he hit upon an artifice which would scarcely be sanctioned by the laws of what we are pleased to call civilized warfare. He discovered by means of a bogus message under a flag of truce on which ship the king was. He then caused poisonous snakes to be inclosed in earthen jars. These he distributed among several ships and ordered them to close up on the king's galley. In the melee that followed

TRAVEL AS AN EDUCATION

It Depends Not Only on What
See, but How You See it.

Travel is an education, but may be need of compulsion to take. A man who spent much time in a foreign country says that he learned more about it by reading than he ever did by seeing. In many instances the sole gain of the travel recreation. Nothing is carried but surface impressions. The noticed contest among tourists over fundamental questions, "Did you see here?" or "Did you go there?" his the sum total of knowledge thus gained. An intelligent reader pass a better examination even on superficial aspects of foreign travel than many of the great family of tourists.

This is not to say that the traveler must go about with a mind so set as to be oppressive, but if he is to get much by his journeyings he must be alert and inquisitive and give memory some exercise. He must purpose enough to try to add stock of valuable knowledge, and must be able to understand the significance of things and to make intelligent comparisons. Otherwise it

WHAT "THE NAVY" SAYS.

"The Navy," the organ of the British Navy League—an organization formed for the express purpose of demanding that Great Britain build a navy of a standard double the strength of that of any other nation—in its current issue discusses the situation created by the failure of Mr. Borden's tribute scheme. "The Navy" asserts that this is a matter wholly for Canada, and says "It must constantly keep in sight the fact that the solution of Canada's part of the problem rests with Canada alone."

This is precisely what Mr. Borden has not done. He has persistently played in the hands of the British admiralty and has endeavoured to use the pronouncements of Mr. Churchill as a club to coerce the Canadian parliament into accepting the schemes, with the threat that unless parliament should do exactly what he told them to, he would not let them do anything at all.

Then "The Navy" says, "It would have no doubt been much more satisfactory, if in announcing the decision of the admiralty to accelerate the construction of the three contract ships of the present year's programme, Mr. Churchill had at the same time made it perfectly clear that it was the definite policy of the government to lay down at the present moment, three additional large armoured ships."

That something further is expected is also indicated when "The Navy" says, "The attitude of the Navy League at this moment is carefully considered moderation on the part of its speakers and writers pending full acknowledgement of the new proposals which may soon be expected from Mr. Borden."

IS IT PAY FOR BRITISH SHIPS NOW?

When is this new proposal to be made by Mr. Borden? It is known that while he is holidaying, playing golf with Sir Thos. Shaughnessy at St. John, N. B., he is also waiting important communications, from the admiralty and taking the C. P. R. magnate advice.

If Mr. Borden's concluding words mean anything, they mean that his new proposal will be for Canada to pay for these three ships which are part of the admiralty's current construction programme, and put them at the disposal of the British admiralty. That is going even further than his original proposition, in its sweeping return to the state of things which created revolution in the U. S. and caused a rebellion in Canada that eventually gave to the Dominion the constitutional form of government which Mr. Borden seems so anxious to abandon.

It is evident from the article in "The Navy" that the British Navy League does not agree with Mr. Borden's trumped up emergency hysteria, but agrees with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that it is not an emergency, but a permanent condition which must be faced, and that this permanent condition requires a permanent policy to meet it.

Canadians must agree with "The Navies" and to call into the open, so their campaign of calumny and insinuation will be less dangerous. While trying to continue as far as possible their alliance with the Nationalists in Quebec, they are still endeavouring to use the Eucharistic Congress and the Ne Temere Decree as stock ammunition in Ontario.

This was emphasized by a speech made by Dr. Edwards, Conservative M.P., for Frontenac, to the Toronto Orangemen, on the 12th, when he said,—"

"We have seen a Papal delegate come here to look over our legislation and inspect our provinces before their boundaries can be extended. We have seen the Prime Minister and forty Federal members of parliament greet him, and the Speaker in his robes of office, escorted by a fully armed regiment of soldiers, walk in the Eucharistic procession, but we have not heard a word about impaired autonomy in that regard. Do you wonder that mothers have been insulted by being told that their children are illegitimate?"

It is hard to characterize such language as this by any other term than infamous. Dr. Edwards is trying to run Sir Edward Carson a close second as a political firebrand, careless of his country, so long as he can win personal or party advantage. The pity of it is Dr. Edwards is merely typical of the Tory party.

Every Canadian who thinks for a moment knows that no papal delegate ever dared come to Canada and try to look over our legislation. He knows that no Papal delegate ever dared to inspect our provinces, other than from a religious viewpoint. Everybody knows that the Prime Minister and members of parliament attended the Eucharistic Congress as free citizens of a free country, as free to exercise their religion as Dr. Edwards considers himself free to abuse it. No one knows of any mothers who have been insulted by being told that their children were illegitimate unless they were so in legal effect as apart from religious belief.

It is time the Tory party dropped this unpatriotic and criminal policy of trying to win elections by setting the two great branches of Canada's population against each other with such a campaign of appeals to fanatic passions and the flaunting of "evils," which do not exist even in the imagination of those who try to exploit them for political effect.

WHAT TORIES DID NOT DO.

ORATORS CONVENIENTLY FORGET
WHISPERED PROMISES OF MARRIAGE LAW.

A great number of Tory orators addressed Orange meetings all over Canada the past week. A careful perusal of their speeches fails to show one in which reference was made to the fact that before last election the Tory workers throughout Ontario gave whispered promises that if Mr. Borden were returned to power, the first thing he would do would be to rush through parliament a uniform marriage law, and if this were unconstitutional, Mr. Borden would immediately change the constitution so as to get it through. Not a single Tory orator was manly enough to say that Mr. Borden did nothing of the sort. Not a single Tory orator was man enough to say the result showed the Laurier government in the right of the matter and that the Borden campaign whisperers had deliberately deceived the people in order to get their support. Not a single Tory orator had the decency to say that when the Lancaster Uniform Marriage Bill was introduced into parliament shortly after his first session opened, it was Mr. Borden himself who killed it.

laws of what we are pleased to call civilized warfare. He discovered by means of a bogus message under a flag of truce on which ship the king was. He then caused poisonous snakes to be inclosed in earthen jars. These he distributed among several ships and ordered them to close up on the king's galley. In the melee that followed the jars were flung unto the deck. The curious bombs were greeted at first with ridicule, which soon changed to panic when the nature of their contents made itself manifest. The galley was extricated from the fight as soon as possible, and the captains of the others, believing that the king had taken flight, followed suit, with the result that Hannibal gained a complete victory.

Entomological.

Charles had heard much at home and at school about the best way to insure good health and, although only nine years old, had taken great interest in the subject. The other day he told his mother that he wanted to go to a lecture that night. Much amused, she asked him what it was about.

"You know, mother, it is about how to take care of yourself. I can't think of the name of it, but you know."

"Maybe I do," she said, "but I can't tell unless you give me a better idea about it."

"Well, mother," he said thoughtfully, "it is about two bugs and a locust." "For a moment she was at sea, and then it dawned upon her that his "two bugs and a locust" was tuberculosis.—New York Post.

A LITERARY ROMANCE

Pathetic Ending of the Love Story of the Poet Laforgue.

In George Moore's "Impressions of Opinions" is told the touching story of the poet Laforgue, who reader to the empress of Germany.

One winter day in Berlin July a girl skating as none ever skated before. The grace of the waist, the long hair and the feet lifted beneath dark skirt filled him with happy. The beautiful skater was an English girl.

He resigned his place as reader to the empress and married, and the beautiful English girl came to live in the hope that literature would yield him a living. But Laforgue was of the kind that with sympathy of the elect, and instead making his living with his pen grew more and more consumptive.

I have heard that the young lived in a poor apartment—three rooms—and that the beautiful English girl, now stricken with dreadful malady, passed between rooms with tisanes. Friends came the high stairs to see them on day evenings; a few admirers attended Jules' funeral and published volume he left in his desk, "Les Contes Legendaires;" the girl died after—two or three months.

How did she live during the interval? Where is she buried? body knows. Yet I have a sense and complete sensation of this little lives.

WOULD MARK GRAVES.

Nova Scotians Plan to Remember Gallant Frenchmen.

On the shore of Bedford which forms the upper part of the fax harbor, and about three from the Provincial Parliament buildings, is a strip of land associated the name of the village of Nova ham.

The locality is historical, for it stood the Prince's Lodge, in resided Prince Edward, Duke of father of our late Queen Victoria when he commanded the troops Halifax from 1794 to 1798.

But a tragic chapter in history enacted on that strip of shore led to the site of Prince's Lodge twenty-eight years before the prince there to reside; for in that strip buried, in 1746, the remains of more than a thousand French soldiers—victims of one of the ill-fated expeditions that ever crossed the Atlantic to Canadians waters.

The story of that expedition, out in France to recapture Acadia, Louisbourg in Cape Breton, is pieced in Canadian school histories the location of the unmarked graves.

of those thousand victims would have been lost had it not been for the research of a number of Nova Scotians interested in the history of the province. They have established the location of the forgotten cemetery, and they are now making effort to erect there a monument to enable them to erect there a monument that will preserve the memory of the men whose bones have crumbled into dust on the shores of Bedford Basin.

One of those interested in this work is Mr. H. N. Paint, late member of Parliament for Richmond, N.S., who, despite his eighty-three years, recently visited Halifax, principally for the purpose of promoting the cause of the disaster of 1746. It is proposed that the plot be purchased and a monument erected thereon.

In the following year came peace, when Louisbourg, with the Island of Cape Breton, was restored to France, to be re-captured ten years later by Amherst and Wolfe.

The expedition made the British Government realize the importance of having a strongly fortified post in Nova Scotia, and so it came about that in 1749—three years after D'Anville's failure—discharged British sol-

TURKISH SWINDLERS.

English Traders Have Suffered Most-ly by Unprincipled Scoundrels.

Taking advantage of the fact that they are too far away to be brought to account, the members of a gang of trade swindlers in Turkey have been very active lately victimizing English traders. Considerable quantities of wool and mohair are exported from Turkey to this country, and it appears to be the practice of various swindlers in Constantinople and other Turkish towns, trading as reputable firms, to ask for part payment in advance for consignments.

Not doubting the bona fides of these Turkish "traders," people in England have sent money in advance in payment for orders, only to find that they have been duped, for the goods, when delivered, have been found to be quite worthless. For instance, a Nottingham firm paid 50 per cent. (about $500) in advance for a consignment of "scoured white wool," which upon arrival turned out to be a mixture of cows' hair and lime of a totally different weight.

The annual White Paper on Turkey issued by the Foreign Office and the Board of Trade, which states that, notwithstanding all the warnings published in trade reports and Chamber of Commerce journals from Constantinople and Smyrna, this black gang was more successful than ever in 1912, gives several other instances of the trade tricks of these Turkish swindlers. A Birmingham firm paid cash against documents for a parcel of hair which upon arrival, proved to be valueless matter of one-quarter the specified weight.

Another case was that of a Dublin firm of candle manufacturers, who ordered one and a half tons of genuine beeswax and paid 80 per cent., or $700, in advance. The goods, on arrival, weighed only three-quarters of a ton, and consisted of almost valueless "off-color" paraffin wax. Another Dublin firm lost $850 by precisely the same trick.

Finding that the rubbish which is sent to Europe and America was not appreciated by the buyers, the gang has now gone one better, and has had false bills of lading printed, which it supplies to its clients. The same purpose is served, as the buyer advances his 80 per cent. just as readily on the forged bill of lading, and the gang is spared the expense and trouble of shipping the rubbish.

The names under which the gang trades have been furnished to the Commercial Intelligence Branch of the Board of Trade, but there is no reason why they should employ any name. The obvious precaution is to inquire from the Consulate, or from the British Chamber of Commerce, before dealing with strangers on this market.

The following methods of courting the sleep that will not come have been recommended to sufferers from insomnia:—

"1. Do not tire yourself in the evening, but idle away the time, allowing yourself to get comfortably bored until bedtime. The more your brain is dulled the better night you will have."
"2. Open your window wide, lie with your head as low as possible, and you will sleep like a post."

"3. Knock off your black coffee, and take no meat in the evening."

"4. Count an imaginary number of sheep jumping over a gate."

"5. Try reading yourself to sleep, but do not read anything lively or interesting."

British Doctor Has a Remedy By Means of the Eye.

Dr. Archer Leslie Hood, an eminent oculist, who has been making a long study of the human eye as an index to character, has just discovered what he believes to be the key to happiness good behaviour and success. If you have been bad instead of good, unhappy instead of happy, and, if your life has been punctuated with miserable failure, perhaps it wasn't all your own fault. You may attribute it to your head, or rather to the condition of your brain.

"It is now possible," declares Dr. Hood, "to make a man a very useful member of society, no matter how erratic, unbalanced and disagreeable he has been, simply by seeing that his brain and eye muscles receive proper nourishment. When anything is wrong it means that the man's brain, or some particular part of it, is being poorly nourished."

"For instance, that part in which the faculty of benevolence is situated may not be getting enough blood. Then such a man will not be benevolent. He will be animal-like in his propensities. He will not know how to keep order either as to his person and clothes or in any work that he does. He may not be properly combawith a mind so serious and oppressive, but if he is to benefit by his journeyings he must be inquisitive and give his some exercise. He must have enough to try to add to his of valuable knowledge, and be able to understand the significance of things and to make intelligent comparisons. Otherwise it makes difference whether he travels all Europe or walks around the block he lives. Mere moving about educated any one. ### Thieves and Their Feet.

A city missionary whose work brings him in contact with thieves was interested in their frequent mention of a certain chiropodist whom they had patronized.

"I shouldn't think," said the missionary, "that men of your calling would have either the time or the money to fool away on chiropodists."

"We're just the kind that need to fool away time and money on them," one ex-burglar explained. "Of all persons on earth men in our line can least afford to be made nervous by bad feet. Creeping around in a strange place in the dark is ticklish business at the best. It requires above all things sound feet and comfortable shoes. To kick a corn or bunion against a rocking chair or the corner of a bureau might knock the most profitable job of the season into a cocked hat."—New York Times.

It Was His.

A small boy was telling his mother of a mishap which had occurred to a playmate of his. The youngster, it appeared, had been regaling himself with one of those large, marblelike candies which are a particular delight of childhood, and in a moment of excitement it slipped down and stuck in his throat. But, said the narrator, they succeeded in relieving him.

"Oh," said his mother, "you got it out, did you?"

"Naw," was the impatient answer. "We shoved it down. It was his, wasn't it?"—Harper's Weekly.

"6. Count very slowly from one upward. It is very rare that one gets up to 200 without going off to sleep."

But the most heroic remedy of all suggested is perhaps the following:—

"7. Place a wet cloth around your head at night, covered with a piece of oil skin, and tied on with a bandage; sleep should then come within a few minutes."

For a Late Crop.

A revivalist was conducting a series of meetings in a rural neighborhood of southwest Virginia. One night he was trying to bring the necessity of early embracing a religious hope to bear upon his congregation. Said he: "We'll just illustrate. You begin in February or March to prepare your ground for planting out your spring crop. You plant in April to be on time. Suppose you neglect this work. May will be late, but perhaps will answer. Let the work go until June. Then what will you do? 'Too late, too late!' will be the cry."

"Just sow it in buckwheat," called out an old farmer from a rear seat.

The preacher sat down.

The Worse the Better.

In the surgical ward of a Berlin hospital a patient was heard to say:

"The worse we are the better they like us here. Why, they won't think nothing at all of that cut of yours—they'll laugh at you. But wait till you get a great big lump inside your head like me. Then they'll make something like a fuss over you. You couldn't hardly get more attention if you was a king. Little things like your cut the boy doctor sees to, but when you get in my shape the chief looks after you every time. My, yes!"

What Is an Orator?

The true orator is the man who can make people laugh, cry and feel what he says. In truth, the genuine orator is the man who has humor enough in his soul to bring the smile to the face, pathos enough in his heart to bring the tear to the eye and dignity enough in his bearing to persuade or move men. He is an exponent of the spoken word. He is a pilgrim moving toward the home of the ideal. He is the embodiment of earnestness, enthusiasm and eloquence.

He will not know how to keep order either as to his person and clothes or in any work that he does. He may not be properly combative when others impose upon him, and will therefore fall an easy prey to unscrupulous persons. He will be a dangerous member of society. But he can no more avoid being like this than he can help having indigestion.

"An examination of the eyes of such a person shows that his brain doesn't get enough blood. The blood can be sent there till the part is normal. Then the man becomes benevolent and kindly. His sense of order will make him systematic and cleanly, well dressed and careful of his appearance. A proper combativeness will make him energetic and determined, so that difficulties do not baffle him nor any one dare impose upon him.

"Every one knows how a steady eye is always the mark of a well-poised man. His eye muscles are strong. An examination of his eye would show that all parts were getting the right amount of nourishment. Criminals, on the other hand, real criminals and not those overcome by circumstances, have every one is familiar with.

"A woman who has no maternal instincts is always found to have a poor supply of blood to the back lobes of the brain. She cannot help not caring for children. But send the right amount of blood to her cerebrum and she will become loving and maternal at once. The significance of all this to society is too far reaching to be even suggested. It will probably form the basis for treatment of all criminals and insane people in the future, being applied also to people who are mentally troubled in less degree."

There on Time.

That President Poincare of France is a man of his word the following little incident shows. He promised to attend a public dinner, but was detained by business. Accordingly he sent his secretary to take his place at the table and announce that he might himself be expected at ten o'clock. Doubts of his coming were expressed, but the secretary spoke confidently.

"M. Poincare will come," he said. "He will be here at ten to the minute."

In due course the clock struck ten, and M. Poincare was still invisible. The secretary was chaffed on the subject, but he did not lose confidence.

"M. Poincare is here," he said, "but he is waiting for the music to stop before entering."

The music stopped, and as the last note died away Poincare walked in.

Legend of the Violet.

A Latin poem of the sixteenth century has a pretty legend of a violet that in mythological days was a maiden called Ianthia, one of Diana's nymphs. She attracted the attention of Apollo, whose admiration she did not return, and, flying from his pursuit, she implored Diana to destroy the beauty which occasioned her so much trouble. Diana granted her request and turned her face to a dull purple. Ianthia, however, soon regretted the loss of her beauty and was pining away with grief, when the goddess had pity on her and changed her into a flower, which still shrinks from Apollo (the sun) and hides her modest head in the shade.

SOME INFORMATION FOR THE FARMER

POTATO BLIGHT.

Numerous enquiries have been made at the Agricultural Office for preventative for Late Blight of Potatoes. This disease causes the rot of potatoes. Last season nearly half the late potatoes were lost from this disease.

NATURE OF DISEASE.

The season for the development of potato blight is at hand. How are we going to prevent the development of this disease and consequent loss of potatoes through rotting?

In order to clearly understand remedial measures which may be suggested for potato blight, let us first investigate the nature of the disease.

The cause of the blight is a minute parasitic plant which grows and develops in the leaves and stems of the potato. The spores of the disease enter the leaves of the potato during the months of July and August, causing small brown patches to appear, most frequently near the edge of the leaves. These spots soon enlarge, become black and decayed in a very short time, emitting a disagreeable yet characteristic odor.

SPRAYING ONLY REMEDY.

From this brief description it will be seen that the disease develops early in the season and if any effective remedy is to be applied action must be taken early. After the disease has established itself in the plant it is impossible to effect a cure, because, being protected by the leaf inside of which it is developing, no spraying solution can reach it. The only effective way of combating the disease, then, is the application of a solution to the leaves which will destroy the spores before they have had time to enter the leaf.

BORDEAUX MIXTURE.

The best and cheapest material yet discovered for the prevention of potato blight is Bordeaux Mixture, which is composed of four pounds bluestone, four pounds lime, forty gallons of water. To make up this mixture proceed as follows: Dissolve the bluestone and slake the lime, separately, in small quantities of warm water. Make up each to twenty gallons, with clean water and pour the two together. After the solution has been mixed it should not be left standing for any length of time, but the slaked lime and dissolved bluestone may be kept in separate dishes indefinitely.

Commencing about July 15th, the potato vines should be kept covered with the Bordeaux Mixture, until danger of blight is past. As a general rule this will require from four to six sprayings during the season at intervals of ten days.

The Agricultural Office have taken over an eight acre field of late potatoes on the farm of Mr. George Spring. Violette and are spraying it thoroughly to demonstrate the efficiency of the Bordeaux Mixture as a preventative of potato blight. The first spraying was given on Thursday, July 24th.

When E. This man expected that he was passing through and asked if it would be possible to obtain an audience with the khedive. In "The Last Frontier" Mr. Powell gives an amusing account of the view:

Agriculture and its attendant demands of irrigation and fertilizers constitute the sole hobby and a ment of the khedive. He is frequently a ready and liberal purchaser of all improved types of agricultural machinery, which he puts to use on his great estates. The record of my compatriot was duly translated to the grand master of ceremony and shortly thereafter a reply came that named the day and hour his highness would receive us at the palace of Ras-el-Tin.

Frock coated and top hatted we went to the palace on the day appointed were received by the officials of the household and shown into the audience room, where his highness awaited us. After a cordial greeting the khedive drew me down beside on a small sofa and motioned to his companion to take a chair opposite. "It gives me particular pleasure to begin," to present Mr. K. to his highness, as he is an authority on cultural machinery, a subject in which your highness is, I know, much interested."

FORKS OF TREES.

They Stay Where They Develop and Never Grow Any Higher.

Some people through careless observation believe that the fork of a forest tree will gradually grow higher from the ground. If they would investigate it would be found that the forks and "heads" of fruit trees are at exactly the same point where they were when first noted.

The state forester in inspecting locust and catalpa groves throughout the state has found owners who have not removed one part of the fork of those trees that have formed forks below the fencepost length, believing that in years the fork would grow up and a fencepost could be cut below the fork. This erroneous belief is the cause of so much of the delay and neglect of pruning in early life of street and roadside trees.

It should be remembered that the base of a fork or a branch of a tree will always remain at the same distance above the ground. The side branches of some trees, such as the elm, usually continue to grow upward, while those of other trees, such as the maples, incline upward when young, and as the tree grows older the weight of the branches gradually brings it to the horizontal. The latter often makes the removal of large branches necessary, which not only spoils the symmetry of the tree, but usually starts decay, which soon kills the tree.—Indiana Farmer.

The Wide, Wide World.

"It's awful how easy some folks get weighted down with a new experience," began the postmaster of Wo-brook in the Hills, with a significant glance at "Boosey" Frazer's bowed form in the Concord wagon at the door.
"That's what bent him over like that.
Yes," after a glance of interrogation from the only listener who was really listening. "He began to bow over soon he realized the size of this globe of ours. You see, from one of the northern counties up 'bove here Boosey went all the way to the state capital. When he come back he looked solemn with the weight o' what he'd garnered.

Force of a Jet of Water.

A factory in Grenoble, France, utilizes the water of a reservoir situated in the mountains at a height of 200 yards. The water reaches the factory through a vertical tube of the same length, with a diameter of considerably less than an inch, the jet being used to move a turbine. Experiments have shown that the strongest men cannot cut the jet with the best tempered sword, and in some instances the blade has been broken into fragments without deflecting a drop of the water and with as much violence as a pane of glass may be shattered by a blow from an iron bar. It has been calculated that a jet of water a small fraction of an inch in thickness moving with sufficient velocity could not be cut by a rifle bullet.—Harper's.

RAILROADS IN GERMANY.

Fine Discipline Because Employees Are All Ex-Army Men.

It is well known that practically all of the railway employees of Prussia have served in the army. When they enter the railway ranks from the army certain credits are allowed for their military service, and certain positions are reserved for army men. This military experience shows its influence on their department and discipline in railway service. There is a noticeable orderliness and precision about everything connected with German rail-ways. In respect for authority and strict observance of the rules the German railway employee has no superior.

The traveler will not fail to notice the red capped station master stand- ing at attention on the station plat- form as the train passes through each station. He will also find the senior signalman, gatemen and other em- ployees connected with the train ser- vice always in evidence, standing like sentries as the train passes. The op- erating official, while riding over the line, can thus take a census of all em- ployees in positions of responsibility. When he alights at a station his rank is at once recognized. The station master immediately salutes and gives a verbal report of the situation at his station. If the official goes into a sig- nal tower the signalman in charge salutes and reports. If he goes into an engine house the foreman salutes and gives a brief report of the work in progress.—Railway Age Gazette.

A MYSTERIOUS DESERT.

Weird Tales That Are Told of the "Soul Appalling Gobi."

Slowly we traveled across the great waste of Dzungaria, the "soul appal- ling Gobi" of some writers, but to us a land of beauty, even if of a somewhat terrifying character, for here more nearly than in any other land is beau- ty allied to terror.

These silent steppes the natives be- lieve to be the haunts of "genii" and the rendezvous of evil spirits. As a recent writer has said, "The great sandy desert of Gobi has been looked on as the dwelling place of malignant beings from the days of hoary antiq- uity."

All luckless travelers in this region from the days of Marco Polo onward have recorded strange stories of weird beings that inhabit the depths of the wastes. Mysterious singing and wail- ing, beating of drums and distant mu- sic are said to beguile the traveler and lead him off the track until he is hope- lessly lost in the wilderness. A recent Russian explorer gives quite a detail- ed account of the wild men of the des- ert.

Listen to the strange story told by Kosloff, who traversed the desert of Dzungaria in its widest part not long ago: "These wild men, the Kkz-Kyks, as they are called, are covered with short wool similar to the fur of a young camel. They have long black hair and black eyes. They are of ordi- nary size, but rather long legged. They roam the steppe in pairs, and when harassed by man they scream, whistle and snarl as they run away. The native Kirghiz claim to have caught them occasionally, but the cap- tives refuse food and drink and die after a few days."—Wide World Mag-

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, July 21.—Renewed fear of black rust damage had a bullish effect today on wheat. Closing prices were firm at a net advance of  $\frac{1}{8}$  c to  $\frac{1}{4}$  c. Corn gained 1 c to  $\frac{1}{4}$  c for the day and oats  $\frac{1}{8}$  c to  $\frac{1}{4}$  c. In provisions the outcome varied from unchanged prices to an up- turn of 22 $\frac{1}{2}$  c.

The Liverpool market closed  $\frac{1}{4}$  d to  $\frac{1}{2}$  d higher on wheat and  $\frac{1}{4}$  d higher on corn.

CATTLE MARKETS

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, July 21.—Business was fairly brisk on the cattle market, but owing to the increased supply of cattle, there being 1200 for sale, a large per- centage of which was common stock, a weaker feeling developed in the market this morning and prices as compared with a week ago show a decline of 12 c to 25 c per 100 pounds. The weather was warm, which tended to check the demand from butchers, but the packers and abattoir companies operated freely and good to choice stock sold at the reduc- tion noted, but common cattle were rather quiet. Sales of full loads of choice steers were made at $7 to $7.10, and pickers lots sold as high as $7.25. Full loads of good cattle brought $5.50, and medium $5.75 to $6.25 per 100 pounds.

A feature of the small meat trade was the firmer feeling in the market for lambs on account of increased demand. Supplies amounted to 1500 sheep and lambs, sales being made as high as $7.50 per 100 pounds. Demand for sheep was good and offerings were ample to fill all requirements at steady prices. The trade in calves was active. A few choice milk fed ones sold at $11 to $12 each, but the bulk of the sales were made at from $3 to $8.

Nine hundred head of hogs were on sale today, and prices showed an ad- vance of 35 c to 55 c per 100 pounds, close

"WOE TO YOU RICH; "BLESSED YE POOR"

The Philosophy of These, the Master's Words, Is Shown by Pastor Russell.

Are the Woes and the Blessings Present or Future?—God Is Very Rich—Many of God's Servants In the Past Were Rich—Why Classify at All?—Why Contrast Rich and Poor?—What Blessings Have the Poor?

PASTOR RUSSELL

Asheville, N. C., July 20.—A large Convention of the International Bible Students Association is being held here, students of all ages giving evidence of knowl- edge of the Scrip- tures. Pastor Rus- sell spoke to-day, from the text, "Woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation.

And He lifted up His eyes on His disciples, and said, Blessed be ye poor; for yours is the Kingdom of God."—Luke 6:20, 24.

The Pastor began by declaring that this address was not intended to arouse class animosity. Although not rich, he could sympathize with the rich in their position, as well as with the poor in theirs. God, who is very rich, is able to sympathize with both classes. The Saviour is also able, who being rich, for our sakes be- came poor, that through His poverty we might become rich in the truest sense. Some of God's faithful in the past were very rich—Abraham, for instance. Nevertheless, during this Gospel Age, not many great, rich or learned have been called to the blessing now offered. Its recipients have been chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith.

The Master evidently included riches of wealth, honor, education, etc., in His statement. He implies that all now possessing any of these blessings will be more or less hindered from obtaining God's highest blessing, and more or less subject to woes. We are not to suppose that He meant that at death the rich would be thrown into everlasting torture. These woes appertain to the present life. At the close of the Jewish Age, this class experienced severe trials; and our Lord intimates that at the close of this Age the same class will have similar experiences.

Wrath to the Uttermost Upon the Jews.

Wrath came upon the Jewish peo- ple to the uttermost, in the End of their Age. (1 Thessalonians 2:16.) Those woes did not belong to a fu- ture life. That tribulations come to all in the present life is undebate- able. But the most terrible forbod- ings are associated with imagin- ary woes of the future life—quite contrary to Scripture. We are glad to set aside this nightmare of the Dark Ages.

The Jews, whom our Lord address- ed, did not realize that they were living in the End of their Age, and that a great settlement was about to come. Similarly, we are living in the End of this Gospel Age, and a set- tlement is now due. Jesus foretold

WIDOWS IN MADAGASCAR.

Their First Year of Mourning One of Abuse and Misery.

There are no gay widows in Madagascar—not, at least, for one year after the husband has died. In Madagascar, on the death of any man of position, on the day of the funeral the wife is placed in the house, dressed in all her best clothes and wearing her silver ornaments, of which in general she possesses a considerable quantity. There she remains until the rest of the house have returned from the funeral.

As soon as her relatives return they begin to revile her in most abusive language and tell her that it is her fault that she has been stronger than her husband and that she is really the cause of his death. They proceed to tear the ornaments from her ears and neck and arms and give her a coarse cloth and a spoon with a broken handle and a dish with the foot broken off. Her hair is disheveled, and she is covered with a coarse mat, under which she remains all day long and can only leave at night. And she may not speak to any one who goes into the house. Neither is she allowed to wash her face or hands, but only the tips of her fingers.

All this the Madagascar widow endures for a year, or at least for eight months, and even when this is over her time for mourning is not ended for a considerable period.

The last straw consists of the fact that she is not allowed to go home to her own relatives until she has been first divorced by her husband's family. —Chicago Tribune.

Obeying the Law.

A small town in Mississippi passed a law that no wheelbarrows should be allowed on the sidewalks in the business portion of the city. Soon after the law was passed one Saturday, which is the busiest day of the week, while the streets were crowded, a negro came along the main street trundling a wheelbarrow filled with groceries. The city marshal stopped him, telling him he was under arrest for pushing his wheelbarrow on the street. The negro looked at the officer for a moment, and then, picking up his little girl, who was walking by his side, he placed her upon the top of the groceries and, turning to the officer, said: "Go on, white man. Dis here ain't no wheelbarrow. Dis is a baby carriage."—New York Times.

Nine hundred head of hogs were on sale today, and prices showed an advance of 35c to 55c per 100 pounds since this day week, which to some extent was in sympathy with the rise of 25c to 40c in the Toronto market at the latter end of last week, but more so to the fact that supplies coming forward are very small. Trade today was active with sales of full lots at $10.75, sows $8.75, and stags at $4 to $5 per 100 pounds weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7 to $7.25; do., medium, $5.50 to $6.50; do., common, $4.50 to $5.25; canners, $2.75 to $3.25; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $5.50 to $5.75; do., medium, $5 to $5.25; butchers' cattle, bulls, $4 to $5.50; Milkers, choice, each, $75 to $80; do., common and medium, each, $65 to $70; springers, $55 to $60; sheep, ewes, $4.25 to $4.50; bucks and culls, $3.75 to $4; lambs, $6.75 to $7.50; hogs, f.o.b., $10.75; calves, $3 to $12.

Auto Scared Horse.

BELLEVILLE, July 22.—Levi Phillips, a young man of this city, had his right leg broken, Mrs. John Lazarus of Toronto had her right ankle sprained and her body bruised, and others were more or less injured when a team of horses, frightened at a passing auto, backed into a ditch and overturned a three-seated surrey containing four grown-up persons and four children.

The accident occurred on Sunday evening on what is termed the Trent road.

Former Brantford Man Slain.

BRANTFORD, July 22.—Word was received here yesterday of the death of Albert P. Whitehead, a former well-known Brantford man, who was shot and killed by a masked bandit at the Manitou, Colorado Springs. Whitehead was in the rotunda of the Cliff House, a fashionable resort, which had 300 guests, at one o'clock in the morning, when the robber met him, ordering up both hands. He tried to escape through a side door, but was shot down. In the meantime the guests were aroused, but the bandit escaped.

Got the Flashlight.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., July 22.—When some Toronto yachtsmen failed to return an electric flashlight, borrowed from a St. Catharines camper at Port Dismouthie at midnight Saturday the camper gathered eighteen friends together, who went to the yacht to recover their property. They captured a member of the yachting party ashore and held him hostage in the pavilion until his friends on the craft made good the value of the flashlight.

...cantary to Scripture. We are glad to set aside this nightmare of the Dark Ages.

The Jews, whom our Lord addressed, did not realize that they were living in the End of their Age, and that a great settlement was about to come. Similarly, we are living in the End of this Gospel Age, and a settlement is now due. Jesus foretold the crisis of the Jewish nation. His message gathered out from that nation all the Israelites indeed, and then the nation was given over to itself. The Divine Hand which had guided them loosed its hold; and human passions accomplished their overthrow in anarchy, which caused their downfall, A. D. 70.

So we understand that the End of this Age has come, and God is gathering His Elect. As soon as this is accomplished, God will permit mankind to wreck their present civilization. As the rich of Jesus' day suffered most keenly, so the rich will suffer most in the coming time of trouble.

Compensations in Nature.

The Pastor then showed that both rich and poor have compensations. The rich have trials and perplexities that the poor know not of. They also have many more temptations to make them less likely to seek the priceless things of God's Kingdom. But we are not to understand that God is partial to the poor. He is choosing a special class, and the conditions surrounding the rich and great make them less susceptible to His message and to the cultivation of humility. The experiences of the poor are most favorable apparently to the cultivation of meekness, gentleness, patience and love—qualities God estimates greatly.

Some poor, however, instead of being drawn to God by poverty, cultivate a spirit of hatred, malice and strife. Such turn away from Him. How true this is to-day!

The class described by Jesus as "ye poor" are those hungering and thirsting after righteousness, who have become God's children. These may be rich or poor in the things of this world; but all that they have is consecrated to God, in order that they may become joint-heirs with Christ.

Thenceforth, the esteem of men, while not ignored, must be secondary to the Lord and His Truth. All that this class may possess will be used to His glory, regardless of the fact that it will all be consumed in His service. The world knows not the followers of Jesus, even as it knew Him not.

A FINE FIX FOR A PRESIDENT.

Anne Royall, the Mother of Newspaper Interviews, Tricked John Quincy Adams and Badgered Him Into Giving Up the Information She Wanted.

In clearing the ground for some improvements in Potomac park in Washington the contractor some time ago removed a stone that for nearly a century was a quaint landmark in the national capital. It is called the "Anne Royall stone" and lay on the bank of the river just opposite the White House, about twenty feet back from the water's edge, at the top of a grass covered knoll.

It was on this stone that Anne Royall sat when she had her famous interview with President John Quincy Adams—at least, so runs the story that has been handed down for three generations by the inhabitants of Washington.

And, according to that story, it would appear that the good lady for whom the stone was named was not only a person of energy, but was endowed with considerable grim determination as well. She evidently had a good strong will of her own and an active mind of her own, and when these two started to work in concert in deadly earnest results were bound to follow. (Whether the good lady's sense of humor was cramped or extensive the reader must determine for himself.

Anne Royall was in a sort the mother of modern journalism. She was the originator of the "interview." She first, in the little sheet that she published in Washington in the second and third decades of the last century, departed from the dry forms that had always characterized newspapers.

She did not confine herself to a mere summary of current happenings, even spiced with careful essays on abstract subjects, after the manner of Steele or Addison. She struck firmly the "personal note." She wrote and printed things about public men as they were in their daily lives—an innovation the startling effect of which we cannot realize today. Her paper was called the Washington Paul Pry and afterward the Huntress.

During the administration of John Quincy Adams congress passed a certain bill, the signing or veto of which by the president was a matter of intense public interest. In those days the interview of the president by a newspaper man was unheard of, and no one had the temerity to ask Mr. Adams what he would do in the matter.

But there was one exception among the timorous journalists of that day. It was Anne Royall. She dared to apply at the White House for a conference with the president, the avowed object of which was to learn from him his intentions concerning the bill.

Poor Anne, however, was kept at a discouraging distance. Day after day she waylaid the president, only to be foiled by his attendants. But she did

The village graveyard its few modest monuments ar stones of marble slab, is the ing-place of neighbor with the other, with its sloping verdant valleys, its imposing and massive mausoleums, is a mon burying-ground of a vast multitude, the one place where the dust of the street vagrants mingle with the ashes of the men of the community.

He was one members of the Institut Canadien and when he died, his widow, a Catholic, proceeded to have him buried at Cote des Neiges. The authorities of the Roman Catholic declared that, as he had lived a member of an institution existed against the will of the his remains were not to be to be buried in consecrated ground. Notwithstanding this dictate, he proceeded to have the body at Cote des Neiges, but the gate locked and admittance was refused. ## COURSE OF THE STARS.

Measuring How Fast and Far They Go Whirling Through Space.

Away out in space millions of miles distant is a star. To the eye it remains, year in, year out, a fixed point of light. Even through the telescope it does not appear to move, so slight is its orbit compared with the enormous distance that separates it from us.

Yet it is whirling through space as we are about some sun which it obeys, as we do ours. How do the astronomers learn this? Through the spectroscope.

Every one is familiar with the fact that when a whistling locomotive is approaching the pitch of the whistle rises and as the engine recedes it falls. This is because the sound waves are crowded together by the onrushing engine and shortened as it approaches and are drawn out longer as it goes the other way.

The same thing happens to the light of an onrushing star. The eye cannot detect it, but the spectroscope does.

The astronomer allows the light of the star to come through a slit and be broken up by the instrument. He selects a single line of the spectrum of the star, chooses a guide line beside it and watches it.

If the star is approaching the light waves will be shortened and the light will become slightly nearer the violet. If it is receding the waves will be longer and the light will approach the red.

ffects a single line of the spectrum of the star, chooses a guide line beside it and watches it.

If the star is approaching the light waves will be shortened and the light will become slightly nearer the violet. If it is receding the waves will be longer and the light will approach the red.

Red is low pitch in light and blue is high pitch. As the star swings about the curve at this end of its orbit the light gradually returns to normal, because the star, while moving just as fast, is not approaching us as much. As the star turns back the line goes the other side of the normal.

By continued observation the astronomer finds how fast and how far the star goes each way and how often it does so. In the case of some stars he discovers that what appears to be one star is really two, which is shown by the fact that a line will divide into two and one part move up and the other down the spectrum at the same time. Such stars are known as spectroscopic doubles.—New York Sun.

Fate.

A strange comedy and tragedy were woven into the lives of Ibsen and Bjornson. As young men they were great friends; then politics dung them apart; they quarreled and never met for years and years. Strange fate brought the children of these two great writers together, and Bjornson's daughter married Ibsen's only child. The fathers met after a quarter of a century of separation at the wedding of their children.

it was Anne Royall. She dared to apply at the White House for a conference with the president, the avowed object of which was to learn from him his intentions concerning the bill.

Poor Anne, however, was kept at a discouraging distance. Day after day she waylaid the president, only to be foiled by his attendants. But she did not grow discouraged. She learned that every morning, immediately after rising, the president walked to the bank of the Potomac, some half a mile in the rear of the White House, and there, after taking off his clothes, plunged into the stream for a swim.

One morning when the president, after swimming far out into the stream, turned to make his way back toward the shore he was astonished to see, sitting upon his clothing, which he had left upon a stone on the bank, a spectated female with a look of great determination. It was Anne Royall, and beside her were a pen and bottle of ink, and in her hand was a sheet of paper.

"Woman, depart!" sputtered the president as he swam up into the shallows where he could touch the bottom a-tiptoe.

"You know who I am, Mr. President," said the woman, "and you know what I want. I'm going to sit here until you tell me what you intend doing with that Cherokee Indian bill."

"Go away, woman!" shouted the president. "This is scandalous!"

"It's scandalous," Anne is reported to have said, "that the people of a free country have to resort to such extreme measures to find out what their servants are going to do. You give me the information that I am entitled to; then I'll give you your clothes. Otherwise I'll stay here—and you'll stay there!"

There was only one outcome to such a struggle. The shivering president told Anne what he expected to do and why he would do it. Then, and not until then, did Anne, armed with copious notes, rise from the stone that she had made famous and hasten to her little printing office, where she lost no time in getting that first and most famous presidential interview into print.—Youth's Companion.

GUIBORD'S GRAVE.

Thinker's Tomb a Place of Interest Near Montreal.

A person who is familiar only with the little sequestered graveyard of the village church it requires a stretch of imagination to grasp the meaning of the wealth and the pomp and the pauperism, the stiness and yet the inadequate glittering superficiality of a cemetery like that at the north-east suburb of Montreal—the Cote des Neiges, the Roman Catholic necropolis. The village graveyard, with its modest monuments and headstones of marble slab, is the last resting place of neighbor with neighbor; here, with its sloping hills and its valleys, its imposing obelisks and massive mausoleums, is the burying-ground of a vast, motley multitude, the one place where at last the street vagrant will lie with the ashes of the great of the community.

At Cote des Neiges, with its average of more than twenty burials a day, a population already of more than three hundred thousand, might be called an actual city of the dead. It is located on the slope and valley between two mountains, in reality are merely large hills. The name when expressed in French is Hill of the Snows. The area of the cemetery is three hundred acres. It is well wooded, and the entrance inward there are rows of magnificent elms.

This cemetery repose the remains of Eph Guibord, whose grave for over four years has been for the spectator a spot of remarkable interest, for it has the unique distinction of being set apart and dedicated as unhallowed ground. Guibord was a free-thinker, who died in 1869. He was one of the founders of the Institut Canadien. When he died, his widow, a Catholic, proceeded to have him buried at Cote des Neiges. The authorities of the Roman Catholic Church held that, as he had lived and died a member of an institution that was against the will of the Church, his remains were not to be suffered to be buried in consecrated ground. Standing this dictate, the wife refused to have the body interred at Cote des Neiges, but the gates were closed and admittance was refused. The body was then placed in a vault in a Protestant cemetery, and there it remained for six months, during which time the question of the right to refuse burial to Guibord was debated through the Quebec courts and finally an appeal was made to the Privy Council of the United Kingdom. The Lords found in favor of the Church, and the Church could not rightly be reversed, and a writ of mandamus, by Queen Victoria, was issued. It called upon the Church to bury the body for burial, but even tremendous efforts were made to prevent the cortege from entering the cemetery.

At one time as if the controversy would end in civil war. When the body for burial arrived, one hundred policemen, with 1,200 volunteers, mounted seven of the principal streets of the city, were called out, paraded with loaded rifles and bayonets, while the artillery brought out heavy guns, hauled up the bodies.

At last finally took place peacefully to prevent desecration of the Portland cement was over the coffin, and the whole surrounded by a huge stone like a coffin. Archbishop of Montreal thereupon declared in a pastoral letter that "the place where

A CRAZY CURRENCY

China Has a Monetary System That Borders on the Chaotic.

UNIT OF VALUE IS THE TAEI.

Yet the Tael is Neither a Coin Nor an Ingot, but Merely an Abstract Term, and Signifies a Unit of Weight—Silver Shoes and Cash on a String.

Of the many strange things in China not the least strange is its currency. To the foreigner it seems a miracle that any business can be transacted successfully with such a medium of exchange. It has been described as chaotic. Nevertheless business and trade flourish in China, which speaks volumes for the business acumen of the Chinese. Perhaps the fact that trade flourished in China long before such a thing as currency was known accounts for the fact that the Chinese, with such a lax system as they now possess, still stand in the front rank of commercial nations.

In China all forms of exchange from barter up are in use. A very large part of the country's business is done against the actual delivery of weighed silver. For convenience silver is melted into rough ingots having the shape of the Chinese shoe. These silver shoes have stamped upon them their fineness and weight. The unit of weight is the tael, which is equal to a quantity of silver weighing 580 grains troy and is worth about 60 cents in our money.

The tael is not an ingot nor a coin, but simply an abstract term signifying a unit of weight, such as a "pound" of butter or an "ounce" of gold. Though an abstract term, it is the measure of wealth and the unit of value throughout the length and breadth of China. A man buys a business for so many taels of silver. His profits are computed in taels. When he makes payment he weighs out the silver according to this unit.

The silver shoes vary in weight from one to seventy-five taels. All silver shops and banks have forges, where the silver is melted in iron ladles and poured into molds. The smelters with their ladles and molds remind one of cooks. They stir the silver with a pair of metal chopsticks. To one not aware of what they were doing it would be natural to suppose that they were engaged in concocting something good to eat. In the process of recasting the ingots their fineness is often changed, being either improved or debased, whichever best suits the interests of the shop. Bankers and money changers are able to determine the quality of the silver by the sense of touch. The sellers or depositors are always at their mercy and must often submit to the operation of having their silver discounted on account of "bad touch."

In the interior of China small purchases are made with copper coins with square holes in the center. These are called "cash" and are threaded on strings so that they may be carried across one's shoulder or on a pole. A string of 1,000 of these cash is worth about 50 cents in our money. ## EMERSON'S FAILING MEMORY.

He Was Conscious of It, but His Amiability Never Wavered.

I had as a fellow guest a man who had long been intimate with Emerson and whom the poet was very glad to see. Talking with me after tea in the library, Emerson said:

"I want to tell you about a friend in Germany. His name I cannot remember," and he moved to and fro uneasily in his effort to recall it. "This friend with whom we have taken tea tonight, whose name also I cannot remember"—here again came a distressed look at the failure of his faculty—"I cannot remember his name either, but he can tell you of this German friend—whose name I have also forgotten."

It was a sorrow to see the breaking down of a great spirit and his agitation as he was conscious of his waning power. And yet, so far as I could see, it was only the memory that was going. The intellectual strength was still apparent and the amiability of his spirit was perhaps even more manifest than in the years when he was in the full possession of himself.

This came out in little things. He was overanxious at the table lest the hospitality should come short, troubled about the supply of butter and apple sauce, and soon after I saw him on his knees on the hearth taking care that the fire should catch the wood to abate the evening coolness that was gathering in the room.—From "The Last Leaf," by J. K. Hosmer.

UNCONSCIOUS OF FAME.

Grote, the Famous Historian, Was a Man of Great Simplicity.

George Grote, the famous author of the "History of Greece," long the standard on that subject, was a man of great simplicity and was wholly unconscious of his own celebrity. Several anecdotes illustrative of this fact are given in "Some Famous Women of Wit and Beauty," one of whom is Mrs. Grote.

While Mr. Grote was walking in the park he would perhaps notice that one or two persons looked at him with some attention. He would at once turn to his wife in alarm.

"Have I got any dirt on my face, Harriet? Is there anything the matter with my hat?" and he would clutch his headgear with both hands. "Why are those people looking at me?"

Mrs. Grote's proud answer was, "Because you are George Grote, that's all!" Once when he was on a visit to Cam-

Archbishop regret thereupon declared in a past letter that "the place where rebellious child of the Church been laid is now, in fact, separated from the rest of the consecrated cemetery, to be no more anything but profane place." And thus to-day stone may be seen there, with nothing in particular to show that spot is different in essence from rest of the cemetery.

A Matter of Cognomens.

Mr. Mark Irish, of Toronto, who was chairman of the recent Borden meeting, tells a story of an experience which he has since had at Ottawa. It is to prove that no statesman is a fool with the common people until he learns to call him by his first name. He was sitting in the visitors' gallery during some very dull proceedings. Because of the dullness of the Ministers found time to talk to him. By this side sat an elderly gentleman, who from all appearances had spent his life mainly in cultural pursuits. The old gentleman noticed the nods back and forth to the unmistakable evidence of familiarity between Mr. Irish and the Ministers duly impressed him. In a low whisper he said, "Is Mr. Borden?" Mr. Irish satisfied his curiosity. He then asked after Mr. Cochran and Mr. Rogers, and each was pointed out to him. Then, in a confidential tone, he whispered: "Where is Sam Hughes?" Mr. Irish had to admit that Mr. Hughes was not in the House. The man was much disappointed, but he asked, "He is worth the whole lot put together."—Canadian Cour-

Will Double Factories.

1900 Canada had 14,650 manufacturing establishments, employing 600 people and representing a capital of $446,000,000. In 1910, according to the latest census returns Canada had 28,300 manufacturing establishments, employing 1,200,000 people and an invested capital of $1,000,000,000. If Canada keeps up this rate of progress she will add 20,000 manufacturing establishments by 1950. In other words, the number of factories will be exactly double what it is now.

Dogs as Sentinels.

Dogs are to be employed as sentinels at the fortress of Gibraltar by the British Government.

Ways of the Japanese.

Thick straw mats are the only furniture needed in a Japanese house. These are three by six feet in size and the place of tables, beds and sofas. The house is never heated. In winter the people put on thick, wadded robes, sit on their feet and hold hands over a little charcoal brazier. For recreation they go out to the burying ground to worship the spirits of their ancestors or to a shrine to see the cherry blossoms. If earthquakes, which are as common there as storms here, shake down the houses or they are swept away by fires that a proverb says sweep every seven years the little folks only smile and murmur "ata ga nai" (There is no help for it).—New York Sun.

chases are made with copper coins with square holes in the center. These are called "cash" and are threaded on strings so that they may be carried across one's shoulder or on a pole. A string of 1,000 of these cash is worth about 50 cents in our money. Sometimes bits of silver are clipped from the silver shoes and used for small purchases. When traveling in the interior one must take with him a large amount of silver shoes, exchanging them for strings of cash at the various shops. The money changers have two sets of scales, one to be used in the purchase of silver and the other in the selling of it.

In an attempt some years ago to introduce a currency based on western models the Chinese government purchased and put into circulation several million Mexican dollars. The people took to the new coins and called for more. The provincial governments then set up mints and began to coin Chinese dollars of approximately the same weight and fineness as the Mexican dollars. They also coined an enormous amount of subsidiary items in the shape of small silver coins and copper pennies.

Soon it was discovered that the new currency was as unstable as the old. The value of the dollar in relation to the subsidiary coinage varied from day to day. The cent was never worth the hundredth part of a dollar. Some days 110 cents were required to make up $1, and on other days it took 130 cents. Similarly the value of the dollar as compared with the tael was continually fluctuating. Sometimes $100 would bring 70 taels and at other times only 65. It was sickening to the people, but very profitable to the money changers.—Harper's Weekly.

The Mozart Cycle.

The only works of Mozart designed for the stage (there are nearly a score of them) that have remained regular "repertory operas," as the Germans say, are "Don Giovanni," "Figaro" and "The Magic Flute." Once in awhile, however, a Mozart cycle is given in one of the larger German cities, and this includes generally, besides the three operas named, "Idomeneo," "Die Entführung," "Così Fan Tutti" and "Clemenza di Tito."—Argonaut.

some attention. He would at once turn to his wife in alarm.

Mrs. Grote's proud answer was, "Because you are George Grote, that's all!"

Once when he was on a visit to Cambridge Grote wished to see the professor of natural history, but was told that the professor was so busy dissecting something that he could not be interrupted. "strong magnifying power, powerful light, shirt sleeves up, cannot be bothered with anybody." The modest historian would have retired, but his wife persisted that it was Mr. Grote who wished to see the professor.

"What?" he cried. "Mr. Grote? Give me my coat. I must wash my hands." In a minute he had transformed himself and would not let them go for two hours.

Animals Don't Need Eyes.

Animals do not depend upon their eyesight in the same way as human beings. Cats and dogs could get along very well without eyes. A cat can find her way with the aid of her whiskers. These are the same width as her body and connected with nerves which cause her to feel the slightest touch.

Dogs can be entirely guided by their sense of smell. Blind dogs have been known to scent and find their way to the most inaccessible places. Their hearing is also preternaturally sharp.

Rats can see very little and depend chiefly upon their noses, muscles, touch and hearing. In the case of most animals the senses of smell and touch are more highly developed than that of sight, and they do not require to depend upon their sight nearly as much as do human beings in regard to safety.—London Globe.

They Didn't Like Razors.

Said Daniel Webster: "—the razor! It has taught me to curse. It has cost me more time and more trouble than all my speeches."

Rufus Choate, the lawyer, called the razor an instrument invented by Lucifer to fill up hell with barristers.

Edward Everett never used profane language, but before shaving he would invariably give vent to all sorts of French barbarisms.

Still he seemed bent on forcing it. "What, then, mademoiselle?" Quickly she faced him, all sternness. "Tis you, sir."

For the first time since they had met the girl had the upper hand.

"I?" he cried aghast. "Yes, you've been remiss." The words were a rebuke; the tone, utter condemnation. They swept him to inglorious defeat.

"I remiss to you? Oh, mademoiselle!" He dropped on one knee, pain in every look and word and gesture.

"Yes, you've not given me my dancing lesson." And the smile that broke over her face as she said it showed the first awakening of one who begins to know.

Dubarre sprang to his feet all ablaze with happiness.

"Ah, mademoiselle, like le bon Dieu, you give pain that great joy may follow."

"Monsieur!" That was all, but the smile, still there, spoke volumes.

"It was your birthday. I thought the lesson forgot." He cried it eagerly as a defense.

"Monsieur!" Reproachfully this time she said it.

"But how I shall atone!"

"The minuet."

"With Pierre and his harp," the man broke in delightedly. He ran to the path and called over toward the lodge, "Pierre! Pierre!" then came back to the girl beside the tree.

"Have you taught many ladies of France the minuet, monsieur?" she asked as they waited for Pierre.

"I fear that none can now be taught, mademoiselle."

"She drew up coldly. "Which means, of course, they all know. We English girls are perhaps more backward. We learn more of housewifery, less of junketings and furbelows."

After that there was silence until Pierre appeared.

"A minuet, Pierre." The dancing master spoke in his most professional tone. The music began, and they took positions.

As their hands met in the dance: "And does the house— Oh, what do you call it?" asked Dubarre.

"Housewifery?" prompted the girl. "Yes, that's it. Does that give the grand air, mademoiselle?" he questioned, most innocently.

"Does flattery come within your province, M. Dubarre?" she answered. "'Twas brave of you."

"Even a poor dancing master can be brave for the truth, mademoiselle."

There was no reply for that.

"You said your countrywomen do not care for the minuet. Why is it?" she asked after a pause.

His face lighted. "Because their hearts pump warm blood, mademoiselle, not freezing water that boils shattered the air of the French love song and broke in rudely on the man and girl standing there silent, looking at each other. They dropped again from the cloud world of fine romance to hard earth with a jar. The wonder, the blush, the softness, all faded from the girl's face as she turned toward the house.

"Here, father; here!" she cried.

Then Sir Henry Percy, Sir John Wilmerding, Captain Thorncliffe and two strange men appeared. The old squire was plainly perplexed.

"What am I to do with these, May?" he questioned helplessly, indicating the strangers. "Another pair of beggarly Frenchmen."

Dubarre heard and bowed. "Your kindness preserved one beggar Frenchman, monsieur. He will be always grateful."

One of the newcomers, a man of about Dubarre's size and general appearance, seemed to think it was time for his appeal. With a wanderer's skill he went straight to headquarters.

"Will ze kind lady help zis poh Frenchman?"

"What can I do?" asked May Percy gently.

The stranger became instantly voluble.

"My name, Jacques Fournay. My cousin, Jean." Then he indicated by signs that Jean was deaf and dumb. "We run from ze la belle France, from ze leetle Corsican. He hate us. We look for comrades, les bons comrades, who came before. We meet, zen we be so happy, but"—as he noted the tables which the servants had begun to spread for the feast—"so hungry."

May Percy's mind was already made up. "Father, no person shall go hungry from here on my birthday," she cried. "These men must stay, eat and rest tonight. Tomorrow you will give them a little money to help them on their way to find their comrades."

Then Dubarre spoke.

"Mademoiselle, may not all the beggar Frenchmen be together? I will gladly share my room with my compatriots."

At the words Jacques Fournay looked quickly at the speaker. For a moment their eyes met. Then Fournay's glance fell.

"The very thing!" exclaimed Sir Henry Percy.

"Yes, a good plan—all together," echoed Sir John.

Miss Percy turned to Dubarre. "Certainly, monsieur, if it gives you pleasure," she said. And so the matter was settled. As Dubarre led the newcomers off toward the house Captain Thorncliffe was coming to the lawn. At sight of the smaller Frenchman the soldier checked suddenly, looked in puzzled fashion, then came on, evidently wondering. The little Frenchman nodded his head and hurried after Dubarre.

The tables had been set, the feast brought on, and the guests came trooping back. May Percy, from her post at the head of the table, seated them.

"On my left, captain; Ethel, next to him; next to Ethel, James; and you, Alice, on my father's right." Then she motioned for Sir John to sit at her own right hand. "Dorothy—Sir Henry—Elizabeth."

"I'm sorry the bishop is not here to ask the blessing," quoth Sir Henry. "You should have brought him, Sir Harvey."

"His grace's gout prevented," aninterested in what promised to be a good story, none noticed Dubarre, who, coming along the path from his lodge, quietly took his seat on the bench beside Pierre and began to listen.

"A traitor, is this Percy?" asked Sir John.

Sir Henry answered. "His mother was my cousin, Sarah Percy."

"Daughter of Cousin John," added May Percy.

Her father nodded. "He disinherited her when she ran away with the Vicomte de St. Croix. We never saw her again."

A gentle "ah" of sympathy for the disinherited daughter of the long ago ran from girl to girl about the table.

"There was no heir. The place came to our branch," continued Sir Henry. "I believe her son is called Percy. I heard she died abroad, and rumor says the boy was taught by Englishmen."

"They did their work well," spoke up Captain Thorncliffe. "As I began to tell you, we were after Soult close. One night a man, claiming to be an escaped English prisoner, joined the ranks. He wore a heavy English beard and looked the Englishman. Also, he gave good information of Soult and led us until nightfall. At daybreak there was a cry of alarm, a stir at the outpost. In the camp three sentinels were dying. A lieutenant who tried to stop the stranger fell wounded. In the morning the 'escaped English prisoner' was gone. So were the headquarters papers." The captain finished with a smile and shrug. Not so his hearers.

"Atrocious! Audacious! Horrible! Could nothing be done?" They were the exclamations of scandalized, stay at home Englishmen, horrified at the insult put upon their country's arms abroad.

The captain listened, then continued, smiling: "Yes, in the morning came a message under flag of truce. 'Feeling that he had taken advantage of our hospitality,' Vicomte de St. Croix, the man who once held a Spanish pass for half a day against a regiment, offered to fight any officer in the English army with sabers for the amusement of the two hosts and the English headquarters papers as the prize."

"Did any one accept?" asked May Percy eagerly.

"The general would not allow an officer to commit suicide," was the laconic ending.

"Suicide?" questioned Wilmerding, surprised.

"Exactly," answered Thorncliffe. "No man in fair fight can stand against French Percy."

"Captain Thorncliffe seems very friendly toward the renegade," simpered Sir Harvey Johnston disagreeably.

"And sure of his prowess," sneered James Bate.

The captain's reputation for reckless bravery was too well founded to mind it.

"Naturally," he laughed. "I was the lieutenant."

Then Mistress Courtleigh's eyes went very big. "He beat you, captain?" she exclaimed.

"Easily. I had called to the men on outpost not to shoot, because I wanted to take the daring fellow alive, myself. 'Thanks, monsieur,' he cried, 'accept your life and a small wound from me.' Then he cut me down, jumped on my horse and rode away amid a storm of bullets, calling back to us, 'Vive l'empereur!' Naturally I feel in his debt."

mark of pain on a girl's white. And the gay tittering about it was the laughing accompaniment breaking hearts. The squire was in a hurry to finish.

"We fixed our hopes on the drea. I have watched John's ding grow, and, whether a play a youth or a man, he has held spect, and today I am very happy."

There was deep silence among guests, the silence of stilled emotion. Beside the tree Dubarre bowed, eager, intent, fearful, awaiting the certain death sentence.

"It is with great joy!"—Sir spoke now very slowly—"that nounce the betrothal of my daughter, Mistress May Percy, to Sir John Wilmerding."

He stopped, beaming over all rang out the "bravos" and the buzz of congratulation. Over big tree a man turned bitterly. "Mon Dieu, and they call that a man!" he said. The prisoner's sentence.

At the table, her strained smiling mock of her own miserable girl sat waiting for the hum of congratulation to simmer down. Sir Percy raised his glass.

"And now to the health of young doves. Their health, their health!" he cried. It was standing, and when they sat Captain Thorncliffe remained feet for a speech.

"I believe with the Scripture gave the captain, 'that he who eth a woman's heart is greater than that taketh a city.'"

"Did Lord Byron or Sir Walter write your Bible, captain?" asked tress Stanfield. But the solid impervious to assault.

"And I will add," he continued a meaning glance at Ethel Courtleigh. "great is the woman who will her heart to be captured. And so—I will drink a health to who have so closely followed the tures, and may they always show wisdom and—and—er—magnanimity they have done on this occasion."

The captain gave place to James amid cheers and laughter.

"Upon my word, I ought something," he began. "I know—I ought, but I cannot think of should all be glad, I dare say you think we should all—that and I—all of us!"

"A handsome pair, eh, James gested Sir Henry."

"Yes, I don't know—oh, yes, of—that is, not"—He cleared his throat paused for a moment, silent ward. "It's embarrassing to say."

The captain coughed violently. Bate stood, not knowing what to do. The others laughed.

Suddenly from behind the table the left appeared Dubarre.

quick strides he had reached the end of the table. His head was his body erect. It was not the master, but a suffering-made man among his peers, who can unanimously to add his congratulations to the rest. By comparison the opposite was more awkward more silly, than ever. The guests ed up astounded.

"Pardon, monsieur." And, with air of a French gentleman, I reached over and took Sir John's wineglass. Then he bowed back so as to face May Percy and rest.

"Even a poor dancing master can be brave for the truth, mademoiselle."

There was no reply for that. "You said your countrywomen do not care for the minuet. Why is it?" she asked after a pause.

His face lighted. "Because their hearts pump warm blood, mademoiselle, not freezing water that boils only from anger. For such, the minuet, but for women of heart, the dance."

"The dance?" She stopped and looked the question. "One we English would like? What is the dance?"

The time, the scene, the maid had all combined to make the Frenchman reckless. The poetry of his French nature was uppermost.

"It is a world's music throbbing in one's feet—this dance! Ah, mademoiselle, to a man!" He paused.

"Yes, to a man!" she repeated slowly. "It is sometimes to carry heaven in his arms until his very heart sings in its joy."

"Carry heaven in his arms, monsieur?"

"I mean the valse, mademoiselle. Would you valse?" His eagerness was overwhelming.

To her cheeks there came the quick flush that faded quick again, in her eyes that look of sweet yet arch surrender. "You are the dancing master, monsieur."

"Pierre, a valse!" he cried.

Then Dubarre stepped close and put his arm about her.

"With all respect, mademoiselle."

She yielded, and they began waltzing slowly.

Now Dubarre spoke. "One, two, three—one, two, three. Ah, mademoiselle, 'tis the poetry of life clothed in the joy of motion. Can you not feel, for thus 'gainst each other hearts talk, throbs to throbs?"

Over beside the tree Pierre began to show signs of uneasiness.

May Percy's head was bent down. Her breast moved with deep breaths, a dawning pink had stolen to her cheeks. Dubarre looked at her.

"Pardon, mademoiselle. I was wrong. 'Tis far more beautiful when the warmth of an English heart melts the mask of ice from off the face." He half-whispered the words.

Pierre coughed sudden warning.

The man continued eagerly, "Then, then, mademoiselle!"

Again Pierre coughed aloud. Dubarre glanced that way. The harpist, with his head, was making violent signs of disapproval.

The hands of the dancing master fell. He stepped back suddenly and bowed. When he spoke it was in quite altered tones and very sad.

"But, mademoiselle, I forgot. There is another dance, quite another dance—the dance of the sword, where men choose honor for a partner and go down to meet death at the end. And that, mademoiselle, is the grandest dance of all."

They stood apart, looking at each other. In his face she watched struggling resolution gain hard mastery, while he saw but blushing wonder and the questioning softness of her eyes. And as they stood thus there floated over from the harp the air of an old French love song, a song of parting. But louder from the direction of the house came the hearty voice of Sir Henry Percy, calling: "May! Oh, May!"

CHAPTER V.

"MAY! Oh, May!" Again the big voice of Sir Henry Percy bawled across the lawn. The noise of it him; next to Ethel, James; and you, Alice, on my father's right." Then she motioned for Sir John to sit at her own right hand. "Dorothy—Sir Henry—Elizabeth."

"I'm sorry the bishop is not here to ask the blessing," quoth Sir Henry. "You should have brought him, Sir Harvey."

"His grace's gout prevented," answered Sir Harvey Johnston, "but he hopes to be over in a day or two."

Now all were in place, and the feast began. Seated on the bench behind the big tree, a dozen feet away and almost out of sight, Pierre, at the harp, made music for the diners. Dubarre had gone to show the strangers his room. Such feasts were not for renegade dancing teachers.

Gradually, at the table, appetites surrendered, and there came that time when tongues were loosed in praise of host and hostess. Captain Thorncliffe had been descanting on the virtues and might of the Percys.

"Why, even the French have a Percy!" he exclaimed as a climax.

"Indeed?" asked Sir John Wilmerding, with interest.

"And he is the worst devil in the army," added the enthusiastic captain.

"Sedition! Sedition!" went the laughing cry about the table, and Sir Henry came quickly with explanations for his family.

"He is my cousin." The squire spoke very much after the same fashion as would have admitted, "My brother died of leprosy."

But Thorncliffe was honest in his admiration.

"Indeed, you should be proud of the connection, sir," he said, while May Percy clapped her hands, saying:

"Good, captain, good!"

"Tell us, is he handsome? Let us know all about him. What has he done?" came the irregular fire of questions from the rest.

"Well," said the captain meditatively, "for one thing he stole General Wellington's papers."

"A thief?" It was the horrified chorus.

"Aye, and one of the boldest," laughed the soldier. "When we started from Lisbon we were warned of this French Percy, who might pass anywhere for English."

"Easily. I had called to the men on outpost not to shoot, because I wanted to take the daring fellow alive, myself. 'Thanks, monsieur,' he cried, 'accept your life and a small wound from me.' Then he cut me down, jumped on my horse and rode away amid a storm of bullets, calling back to us, 'Vive l'empereur!' Naturally I feel in his debt."

"Audacious scoundrel!" roared Sir Henry, then added, "But his granddad, old Jack Percy, over again."

"But is my cousin handsome?" questioned May Percy.

"They say so, without his beard."

"And married?" she persisted.

The captain laughed again. "No, and he despises women. They adore him."

"Well, for my part," sneered James Bate, "I don't admire renegades."

"Nor I like spies," simpered Sir Harvey Johnston.

Sir John Wilmerding had become a bit excited. "Nor I, either," he cried. "The low thief!" Then he added viciously, "I'd love to have him at my sword's point, this French Percy."

At that Gaston Dubarre and Pierre, seated on the bench behind the tree, looked at each other. "A shallow strutter, Pierre," said the dancing master. And between two touches on the harp strings his man nodded a smiling "yes."

Over at the table May Percy and Ethel Courtleigh were talking low. "I'd like to meet my cousin," said Mistress Percy.

Captain Thorncliffe, still chuckling to himself over Sir John Wilmerding's last speech, heard her.

"You may yet, young lady," he cried.

"Tis said to be French Percy's boast that some day he will come to England and stop at his mother's home. They say he promised her to do it."

Sir Henry Percy rose quickly then.

"Tush, tush!" he exclaimed irritably. "Enough of this. We should be merry, not discuss French dogs, for to me this is an especial time of joy."

"To be sure, to be sure," cried Thorncliffe, eager to make amends, "for isn't it the seventeenth birthday of one of the fairest maids in all England?"

"Right, captain, but my joy goes deeper. This is not only my daughter's birthday, but today sees my fondest hopes well on the road to be realized."

Sir John Wilmerding glanced at May Percy, then smiled a quick smile of joyful anticipation. At her father's words the girl's eyes flashed fierce rebellion; then, as she looked at him standing there so happy, became as quick miserably resigned. With mastodon playfulfulness Sir Henry continued:

"It's a pretty secret, and it is my pleasure, friends and neighbors, to tell you of it, but can you guess this little romance?" He paused.

About the table were sly winks and laughs and gestures toward Mistress Percy and Sir John. A dozen feet away and partly screened behind a tree a man stood at strained attention, watching a girl's face and listening for every word.

Again Sir Henry took up his speech. "It all goes back to the time when Sir Elmer Wilmerding and I were young men, friends, closer than brothers. And in those days we planned a romance. He had a son, young John Wilmerding, and I a daughter."

Now at the tree Pierre stopped playing and rose quickly to lay a sympathetic hand upon his comrade's shoulder. That comrade paid no attention—only with his eyes he sought that other pair of eyes, equally miserable, and watched, answering line for line every

"Me half French," explained Four- ney.

"Ma foi!" And the way of saying it made the half Frenchman squirm.

"Other half Anglais," he continued, eager to explain.

"Mon Dieu!" muttered Pierre.

"An' you?" asked Fournay. The servant brushing clothes looked at him with wide, honest seeming eyes.

"We from la belle France, chased by ze leetle corporal. He hate us. We seek comrades—les bons comrades, who came before. We fin' them, then we be so happy."

It was Fournay's story told over again. The man who had told it first smiled. He saw the irony, but he was equal to the occasion.

"We two—you two—alike," he cried with enthusiasm. "Let us be four—all in one." Pierre stopped brushing Dubarre's coat and appeared to be weighing the proposition seriously.

"That's nize," he murmured. Then, hesitatingly, "If you could jes parley Francals!"

Fournay rushed to vindicate himself fully now. "Father French. Come to

"Ah!" interrupted his listener, as though greatly relieved.

Jacques Fournay continued: "People run us away. Say I Anglais. Anglais say I French. We be French refugees to Anglais; Englishmen to French. Voila!" He ended with a shrug.

Big Pierre scratched his head in most contented style, all the while nodding approval and saying over and over again: "Ah! Oui, oui!" Then he went back to his clothes brushing.

Fournay asked the next question.

"You been long run away from France?"

Immediately the harpist became too excited to talk straight English.

"Long?" he cried. "Ah, ma foi! Much longer 'an if we had not been taple. I saw him in France when he was awarded the cross of the Legion for stealing the English plans."

"Then the 500 guineas reward and the £100 offered by Wellington are ours," exclaimed Fournay.

"Not till we get the soldiers and have him arrested," answered his practical assistant.

"We'll go now," declared Fournay. "My 'French' won't stand the strain longer."

"Our going might make him suspi- cious," objected Jean.

"Pshaw! By starting now we can have the soldiers here before noon to- morrow. He can't get far by then. Let us leave through the window be- fore that man Pierre gets back. If he suspected, the fighter Percy would kill us both."

Quickly they prepared to go. Pierre had taken Jacques Fournay's coat, so the spy appropriated one belonging to Dubarre.

As they were leaving, Jean paused. "That ring," he said and got it from the waistcoat hanging in the closet. Fournay looked at it.

"That's proof enough," he cried, "the St. Croix seal!" And, putting the ring in his pocket, Fournay led the way out through the window.

Pierre had some difficulty in finding the dancing master. He ran all the way to the garden, then was compelled to wait, for Dubarre stood talking to Captain Thorncliffe and could not be disturbed. At last the harpist, nearly consumed now in the fever of his own impatience, got his chance to tell of the strange Frenchmen he had left in the room.

"And he could not speak French?" said Dubarre in surprise.

"Only English, monsieur," replied Pierre positively.

"Come, I'll sample it. Mayhap he'll wish both were deaf and dumb."

They hurried to the lodge and threw open the door. A gust of air from the open window met them, and the flick- ering candle showed the room to be empty.

"Why, Pierre, what have you done with the guests?"

The dancing master asked the ques- tion, stopping to laugh at his assistant. Pierre was running about the room like a dog that had lost a trail. He rushed to the closet and looked under the bed, but no Jacques Fournay, no dumb Jean appeared. Then the man stood gazing at Dubarre in mute per- plexity.

"They seem to have gone, Pierre. How was it?"

The other could only look at the win- dow and mutter:

"It was closed when I left."

"Ah!"

Dubarre stepped quickly to the win- dow and held a candle outside. There were footprints on the grass. He put the candle back on the mantel, fasten- ed the shutters and closed the window. Then he looked at Pierre, and Pierre looked at him.

"They've gone," said Dubarre after a moment of staring. "Certainly our fellow countrymen act queerly. One cannot talk French, the other cannot talk at all. And now they leave us suddenly through a window."

"Well, one of them left a coat," re- marked Pierre after the manner of a man seeking small comfort.

"How do you know that?"

"Because I have it on now myself, and a tight fit it is. I took it to keep him from running away while I went for you."

to Pierre, and, bowing, the man slip- ped from the room.

Dubarre closed the door after him and turned to face his visitor.

CHAPTER XVII.

"UNTIL tomorrow night?" The girl repeated it as a question. Then with a quick flirt she threw the shrouding hood aside, and May Percy stood before him. A drizzling rain was falling without, and somehow a dozen drops or so had stolen under her hood to sparkle amid the black hair like diamonds. Her cheeks were red from hurrying. Her eyes, big, eager, questioning, sought his.

Dubarre drew a long breath. "Yes," he said.

May Percy gave a quick, relieved laugh. "Why, I need not have hurried so. You did not speak to me, so I came to tell you goodbye."

She extended her hand. After a scant moment he dropped it, as some- thing not to be safely held.

"Mademoiselle knew I was going?" he asked.

"Yes. Captain Thorncliffe told me."

Dubarre frowned. "The captain! I asked him not to tell."

"So he said. You were to leave early in the morning, and what a shame it was none of us would get to tell you goodbye after you had been so kind. He was coming tonight, he thought, and I decided I would, too, because I was afraid I might not wake up in time and you would be gone."

She had rushed through it all in a breath, for Dubarre was still frown- ing. Now he bowed to her ceremon- iously.

"Mademoiselle is very kind, but also very imprudent. Did mademoiselle bring her maid along?"

At that Mistress Percy's face showed only startled, innocent surprise.

"No. Why should I? I was not afraid. Besides"—She hesitated.

"Besides?" he asked.

"I did not want them to know," she blurted out impulsively.

"Want whom to know?"

"My father and Sir John."

"Sir John is mademoiselle's affianced husband," suggested the dancing mas- ter, with just a shade of reproach in his speech.

Blazing with sudden, splendid anger, Mistress Percy turned on him. "That does not entitle him to hold authority over me. I am not yet cramped with- in a wedding ring, thank heaven!"

"Mademoiselle!" His tone was whol- ly reproving now, but that served only to enrage her the more.

"Oh, you needn't take his part. I believe all you men are alike. I hate you all. I'm sure I do." And, whirl- ing away from him, she stood drum- ming her fingers on the table. Dubarre shook his head despairingly. When he spoke it was in a suave, soothing tone.

In a flash Dubarre had spied it un- der her seat at the table.

"Ah, monsieur, you have it. Thank you."

He held the glove toward her silent- ly. She started to take it, and he drew back his hand a little.

"Mademoiselle, can you? May I? Is there not some little ray, one token just for the helpless one, the hopeless one, the outcast?"

She looked at him, half frightened, all sorrowful. "Yes," she said, speak- ing slowly and started away, looking back. "Yes," he repeated, and again, "Yes."

He watched her until she was gone from sight. Then he raised the glove to his lips and kissed it passionately, repeatedly.

The farewell was ended.

Pierre coughed and came from be- hind the tree. Dubarre hastily hid the glove in his breast, then turned that way.

"Pierre, we leave for France in the morning."

CHAPTER VI.

THREE men sat in the dancing master's room. Within a minute after entering Fournay had seen all the room offered. With quick, accustomed glances he noted that the door through which he came afforded the only normal exit. The one just op- posite in the other wall opened only into a closet. Beside it he saw that the big eight day clock, which reached from the floor almost to the door top, showed just the hour of 6. On the right wall as he entered he swept over the only window, on one side of the handsome oak mantel, and the tester bed on the other. He could have told the wood of the table placed near the clock and the design of the three chairs or how one brass andiron in the fire- place had been polished more than the other. It was a quick eye had this strange wanderer, chased from France by "ze leetle Corsican."

Now Fournay had been in the room two hours, and he was heartily tired of it. His cousin Jean snored in one cor- ner of the fireplace. Pierre, brushing busily away at Dubarre's clothes, was no great company. Fournay had begun to grow sleepy. He leaned back in his chair, yawned and looked at the clock.

"So slow ze time pass in ze coun- tree?" It was more a question than anything else. Pierre, still busy with the brush, replied in kind.

"You are from ze city—from Paris?"

"Non, Normandie."

"Parlez vous Français?" asked Pierre abruptly. The suddenness of such a foolish question apparently confused Fournay.

"Non, non," he said; "that is, not parley well."

The other's lifted eyebrows and won- dering shrugs were marvels of their kind.

"A Frenchman not parley Fran- caise!" he said.

"Me half French," explained Fournay.

"Ma foi!" And the way of saying it made the half Frenchman squirm.

"Other half Anglais," he continued, eager to explain.

"Mon Dieu!" muttered Pierre.

away so long."

"You mean you been a long time here?" questioned the disgusted Fournay.

Pierre looked at him with admira- tion. "Ah, you see, I Frenchman. How nice to talk wo—Anglais, French—both well." The combination of apol- ogy and admiration in his tone was wonderful.

After that there was silence for a time. The harpist lifted the dancing master's coat and began to shake it. As he did so a heavy ring dropped out upon the floor. With a quick "Mon Dieu!" muttered under his breath, Pierre began to search about for the ring. He brought a candle from the high mantel to help him. Fournay sat back in his chair and looked on with indifference. His companion, Jean, had waked up very suddenly. Now and then, when Pierre's back was turned, the pair would look quickly at each other. Pierre was too interested in his search to notice.

"Why, there it is by ze leg o' ze ta- ble!" cried Fournay at last from his chair. He had seen the light gleam on the gold. Pierre snatched up the ring joyfully.

"Mon Dieu, me glad!" he cried as though immensely relieved; then added in explanatory tone: "A present from the Anglaise mademoiselle he teach the minuet. He would no lose it. 'Put it away.' And he slipped the ring back in the waistcoat pocket from which it had fallen. Then he went over, opened the closet door and hung the waistcoat inside.

"Ma foi! If I lose it he break my back."

"He like mademoiselle?"

"He teach her," replied Pierre dip- lomatically.

"Mademoiselle—great lady," ventur- ed Fournay.

"She—a Percy," answered Dubarre's man proudly.

"Far above poor French dancing mas- ter."

"Or French music teacher," was the quick reply.

"French blood good ees blood of Anglais," said Jacques.

"Diab! Yes."

"There be a French Percy. I hear of him."

Pierre's face became puzzled.

"A French Percy?" he questioned.

"Yes. Jean see him once. He come with soldiers. He ver' brave."

Pierre put his hand to his ear and stood listening intently.

"Oul, oui, monsieur; I come!" he cried. Then, snatching up a coat from among those lying on the table, which happened to be a coat of Fournay's, he rushed out through the door, slipping on the garment as he ran. The two men left in the room looked after him in mute surprise. Then they looked at each other.

"Well, I'll be curst!" exclaimed the dumb Jean Fournay.

Jacques Fournay turned quickly to the supposed dumb man. "Are you sure, Jean—sure?"

"Yes, sure," cried the assistant eager- ly. "The smaller one, he is Percy La- tapie. I saw him in France when he was awarded the cross of the Legion for stealing the English plans."

"Then the 500 guineas reward and the £100 offered by Wellington are ours," exclaimed Fournay.

"Not till we get the soldiers and have him arrested," answered his prac- tical assistant.

"What did he wear?"

Pierre looked all about the room and in the closet.

"Mon Dieu, he took yours, mon- sieur!" he said at last, with a wry grimace.

"My coat gone? My waistcoat, then?" asked Dubarre sharply.

Pierre brought it out. Dubarre felt in the pockets quickly.

"My signet ring gone, too," he cried, "and that's worse. At home it's a family treasure, here a family peril."

"How, monsieur?"

"Why, it points out the man on whom it is found as one England is hunting."

"I'll get it, monsieur." And Pierre started for the door.

"Come back!" cried Dubarre. "To claim it would bring disaster on both of us. Let's see the coat he left."

Pierre took off the garment and handed it to him. The dancing master looked it over, then tried it on.

"I'll travel in it since he got mine. What do you think?" He pulled at the coat to make it fit better. "Tis lucky, we are of a size, this strange French- man and I." Then he felt a small, hard substance. "Oho, a snuffbox!" he cried, pulling it from his pocket. "I'll test the brand monsieur the thief uses."

He opened the box, but it contained only a thin paper doubled and rolled into as small compass as possible. Du- barre straightened it out. As he looked at the paper his face changed suddenly.

"French refugees, Pierre! French renegades rather! Low born English spies, this Fournay and his man Jean. See! Look at this!" He held the paper toward the other in great excitement. "Indeed, we leave in good time."

"Spies! Low English thieves!" cried Pierre, in turn looking at the paper.

"Come, come, Pierre!" exclaimed Du- barre. "You must away and at once. I'll stay until tomorrow to put out a false trail. Here!" He ran to the bed, and from a cunningly constructed hid- ing place drew out a bag of money. "Take this. Get your horse where we left it, at the second farm. Ride like mad to the cove. It's barely twenty- five miles. Have the boat lie off every night for a week, in case I am delayed. Three lights, triangle, in the rigging will be the sign. Are you ready?"

While he was talking, Pierre, with soldierlike alacrity, had been at work. Now he stood holding a small bundle of clothes that looked suspiciously like a mere excuse for hidden pistols.

"Monsieur, may not the spies come back for you?"

"No, no, Pierre, I'll risk it! I'll put out false reports to confuse Percys, spies, English—all."

Some one knocked lightly at the door. Dubarre half drew a small clasp knife, then, remembering himself, went calmly to answer the knock.

"Bon voyage, Pierre," he whispered, his hand on the latch. Then he opened the door.

A girl muffled in a cape, with the hood drawn over her face, slipped quickly into the room. Astonished, Pierre started back. Dubarre put his finger to his lips.

"Until tomorrow night," he muttered to Pierre, and, bowing, the man slipped from the room.

Dubarre closed the door after him and turned to face his visitor.

Clever Way to Dispose of Old Unmounted Photographs.

CURTAINS FOR THE SUMMER.

Fourteen Wild Flower Girls Who Formed a Nature Club to Study the Beauties of the Great Outdoors—How They Managed the Outing Trips.

My Dear Elsa—What do you do with the old photographs you have been collecting for years? Mine have been reposing in a big box in a storeroom closet. Every once in awhile the box is raised enough for me to poke in some more discarded pictures. Last week while going through the box I had a most brilliant idea. I am sure the conception is entirely original, and I am delighted to pass it along to you.

To begin at the beginning, I asked one of the family last Christmas for a book made especially for unmounted photographs and fortunately got a much better one than I would have bought myself. In the rush of things this book had never been used for its appointed purpose until the day when I was seized by the above mentioned great thought.

I got down the box of old pictures and soaked them in the bathtub in clear, cold water until they were loosened from their mounts. Next I dried them between sheets of clean white blotting paper. When they were dry I assorted them into groups. First came family pictures, which I gave the place of honor in the front of the book and in order according to the age of the portraits. Then came pages of friends, and you, Elsa, are beautifully represented. The very prettiest part of the photograph book is devoted to the babies of my friends. I wrote the names under each picture and, when I could, the dates too.

My picture book is really very interesting and brings the past into the present in a happy way. Should you care about adopting my photograph scheme I will give you a word of warning concerning mounting the pictures: Do it when they are half dry. If you wait until they are entirely dry you will have to brush them over with water and blot again with a clean blotter before applying the paste. The regular photographer's paste is the best to use.

In your last letter you asked for a certain suggestion for your new bungalow. Here's the smartest curtains for you, which I saw in a very pretty summer cottage recently built by a friend of mine. Upon my expressing great admiration for her hangings my hostess confided to me that they were made of unbleached muslin. Well, dear, you never would have believed these lovely draperies to have sprung from such humble origin, and it was only after their owner had told me that she had dyed the muslin a deep golden yellow to harmonize with the wall paper that things began to explain themselves. She was driven to this expedient because she could not find any material the right shade within her purse limit.

The curtains hung straight at each of one thing for this sum to go round—crackers, fruit or sandwiches. And, oh, yes, I forgot to say that each girl carried a jackknife for clipping—one could not get along without this implement on this kind of a picnic.

One of the wild flower girls confided to me that next Saturday the club will have a "dandy hike to the home of an out of town member," which objective point to the wanderings evidently lent an interest to the trip. If you could have seen the bright eyes and rosy cheeks of the nature hikers you would form a club and invite as an occasional visitor to the picnics your town tired friend.

mer. The designs are posies of vari-colored blossoms in more or less gaudy colorings, some suggesting the futurist school, others as quiet and sedate as any mid-Victorian could desire.

The dress pictured is of this material, and it is as dainty, attractive a little summer costume as the most fastidious girl could wish.

AN ASPARAGUS TIP.

Try This Very Satisfactory Way of Cooking This Vegetable.

Asparagus is too fine a vegetable to be carelessly prepared. Think for a moment how absurd it is to boil the delicate green tips for the same length of time as the solid stalks! And yet this is just what the average cook does.

With this in mind, hunt through

An excess of water dissipates the flavor of asparagus. Strongly impregnated as this water is with the asparagus flavor, it is valuable in many ways. Slightly thickened and with the addition of milk or white stock, asparagus soup is an easy and economical possibility.

Where the asparagus is to be served on toast the flavor is increased by moistening the toast with a few spoonfuls of this asparagus water. It is also a desirable substitute for milk or cream in the making of a sauce. In such case any formula for white sauce can be used, simply adding to the blended butter and flour the water in which the asparagus has been boiled. The same suggestion applies to the making of Hollandaise sauce when it is to be served with boiled asparagus.

Dishes For Refrigerator Use.

An efficient housewife recently said she always uses separate dishes for the laying away of food in the icebox. White enameled small bowls and plates are used and give the icebox a much neater appearance than a mixed army of bowls and platters. More important, she finds that it is a bad habit to use good dishes in the icebox, as they so frequently become clipped from overlapping or crowding.

When she wanted to use her cake bowl, for example, she said, she always found it full of apple sauce or something and so lost time emptying it. So she decided to keep these separate white enamel pieces just for lay away use.

Whipped Cream Substitute.

Whipped cream on strawberry short-cake is delicious, but the cream is not always obtainable when wanted and is costly. An excellent substitute that is cheaper and quite as tasty may be made by whipping the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth and fold into half a pint of crushed strawberries, pouring the sauce over the cake as each piece is served.

RECRUITING SONGS.

Patriotic Airs That Have Made History.

That there is nothing which stirs the public so much as a good patriotic air has again been strikingly illustrated by the success of the French song which Mr. Harry Frazer, the popular variety artist, is now singing in London. It is a war song, containing four bars of "The Marseillaise," telling the story of a boy who went to war, the chorus explaining how he found that "this is the day to die."

"The song was composed for me," said Mr. Frazer, to the writer recently. "By a friend, and I sang it for some time in Paris and Rheims. I don't think I am exaggerating when I say that it has gained more recruits for the French army than any music since 1870, the year of the Franco-Prussian War. Everywhere the air of the song is being sung by the French, and it has a vogue equal to that of 'The Absent Minded Beggar,' or any tunes which were in favor in this country at the time of the South African War."

No music of modern times, however, has aroused the martial spirit in France so much as that of the French national hymn, "The Marseillaise," which was composed in one night in 1792 by Rouget de Lisle, a young officer, during the siege of Strasbourg. It was speedily conveyed to the revo-

BUDDING A WALNUT

New Method Developed by St. Oregon Agricultural Coll.

A new method of budding has been developed by E. J. the Oregon agricultural extension. Buds one year old; those found just below the year's growth. Only plump buds have remained dormant are en-

It is also possible to use bud scion wood cut during the very early spring, when it is in a perfectly dormant condition. Scions are placed in moist sawdust a couple of weeks before the buds are done the buds may be removed easily.

In making the hinge bud, a vertical incision about half an inch is made about one inch above the face of the scion and a similar incision about three-fourths of an inch on the other. The two are then connected with a longitudinal incision forming the completed "I" cut stock.

The bud, which is rectangular, exactly the same length as the distance between the two transverse incisions on the stock, is removed from the stick by first making two transverse cuts of the proper distance, giving the correct length to the bud, then connecting these two by golden yellow to harmonize with the wall paper that things began to explain themselves. She was driven to this expedient because she could not find any material the right shade within her purse limit.

The curtains hung straight at each end of the window, while very simple hemstitched scrim curtains were run on small rods closer to the glass. The room was wonderfully pretty in yellow and white, with rugs of brown tint and brown furniture.

It's a long jump from brown furniture to the subway, but I'm going to take the leap and tell you about a charming party of young girls I saw in the tube the other morning. At one of the uptown stations fourteen of the brightest, cleverest girls I've seen for a long while boarded the train. I could see from their dress that they were bound for some country expedition. They wore old tan shoes, rather passe short walking skirts, cloth caps or tams, loose fitting gloves and sweaters. I learned that these up to date girls were starting on one of their weekly nature hikes to the lovely Palisades of the Hudson to become acquainted with the great out of doors and all its charms, and, judging from their talk, they were making great headway in the knowledge of trees, birds and wild flowers.

The members of the Nature club, as they call themselves, are each allowed to spend the large sum of 5 cents for the picnic luncheon, and they generally managed, I found out, to buy enough

Asparagus is too fine a vegetable to be carelessly prepared. Think for a moment how absurd it is to boil the delicate green tips for the same length of time as the solid stalks! And yet this is just what the average cook does.

With this in mind, hunt through your kitchen utensils until you find a receptacle that will hold a bunch of asparagus upright during the entire cooking process. An agateware pail is a good thing, and the inner kettle of a double boiler is often of a desirable height and narrowness for this purpose. One ingenious housewife always buys a big, new coffeepot at the beginning of each asparagus season.

It is a common tin one, such as campers use, but she claims there is nothing so well adapted to the proper boiling of asparagus. The heavy stalks have an abundant depth of boiling water, while the delicate tips extend above the water line and are steamed, rather than boiled, to a delicious tenderness.

Where many bunches of asparagus must be boiled at the same time the desired result may be gained by placing the bunches horizontally in a large vessel, with boiling water to cover and letting them cook for the first ten minutes in that position. Then prop the bunches against the sides of the kettle so that the tips shall be entirely out of the water for the remaining time. In this way the tips are not overcooked, as they would otherwise be and as they usually are.

No music of modern times, however, has aroused the martial spirit in France so much as that of the French national hymn, "The Marseillaise," which was composed in one night in 1792 by Rouget de Lisle, a young officer, during the siege of Strasbourg. It was speedily conveyed to the revolutionaries throughout France, and was brought to Paris by the volunteers of Marseilles, who sang it as they entered the capital and went marching to the storming of the Tuileries.

In Germany no patriotic song has been sung with such fervor as the famous battle hymn of the Germans, "Die Wacht am Rhein" ("The Watch on the Rhine"). It was written in 1840, but remained practically unknown until the outbreak of the war with France, when it was sung by every soldier and every man, woman, and child throughout the German Empire. "The Watch on the Rhine" was to Germany at that time what "The Marseillaise" was to France—a soul-stirring composition, which made men eager to take up arms and fight for the cause which they thought was right.

Four or five songs have undoubtedly helped to make the history of the United States. "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Marching Through Georgia," "John Brown's Body," "Dixie Land," and "Yankee Doodle" have, it is estimated, won as many recruits for the U. S. A. army as the hope of promotion and glory.

In regard to England, the most notable recruiting song of modern times was "The Absent-minded Beggar," which created such a furore during the South African War. But we must not forget Macdermott's song.

We don't want to fight, but by jingo if we do.

We've got the ships, we've got the men, and we've got the money, too.

It was a song that traveled all over the world, and as Mr. Paul Preston says in "Songs of Revolution," "If the Great Macdermott, as he was styled, had cared to use his songs as a recruiting agent he could have raised an army single-handed, and it would have made this its battle song."

HOME COURSE IN SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE

FIFTEENTH ARTICLE. THE PROPAGATION OF PLANTS.

By L. C. CORBETT, Horticulturist, Barean of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture.

IN addition to using the natural means of reproduction of plants by seeds, bulbs, etc., man has developed several artificial ways, of which the principal are cuttings, layering, grafting and budding.

A cutting is a detached portion of a plant inserted in soil or in water for the purpose of producing a new plant.
This method of propagation is considered most important. The most common form of hardwood cuttings consists of a straight portion of a shoot or cane nearly uniform in size throughout and containing two or more buds. At the lower end it is usually cut off just below a bud, because roots develop most readily from the joints. At the top it is usually cut off some distance above the highest bud. A heel cutting consists of the lower portion of a branch, containing two or more buds, cut off in such a manner as to carry with it a small portion of that branch forming the so called "heel." A mallet cutting is produced by severing the parent branch above and below a shoot, so as to leave a section of it on the base of the cutting. The principal advantage ment station.

STOCK.

grafting is to be done. If cleft grafting is the style to be employed this practice frequently gives good results, but spring cutting of scions for whip grafting is not desirable.

The stock is the plant or part of a plant upon which or into which the bud or scion is inserted. For best results in grafting it is essential that the stock be in an active condition.

Cleft grafting is particularly adapted to large trees when for any reason it becomes necessary to change the variety. Branches too large to be worked by other methods can be cleft grafted. A branch one or one and one-half inches in diameter is severed with a saw. Care should be taken that the bark be not loosened from any portion of the stub. Split the exposed end with a broad thin chisel or grafting tool. Then with a wedge or the wedge shaped prong at the end of the grafting tool spread the cleft so that the scions may be inserted.

The scion should consist of a portion of the previous season's growth and should be long enough to have two or three buds. The lower end of the scion which is to be inserted into the cleft should be cut into the shape of a wedge, having the outer edge thicker than the other. In general it is a good plan to cut the scion so that the lowest bud will come just at the top of this wedge, so that it will be near the top of the stock. To make this contact of the growing portions doubly certain the scion is often set at a slight angle with the stock into which it is inserted.

After the scions have been set the operation of cleft grafting is completed by covering all cut surfaces with a layer of grafting wax.

Whip grafting is almost universally used in root grafting. It has the advantage of being well adapted to small plants only one or two years of age, and it can be done indoors during the comparative leisure of winter.

The graft is made by cutting the stock off diagonally—one long smooth cut with a sharp knife, leaving about three-fourths of an inch of cut surface.
Place the knife about one-third of the distance from the end of the cut surface at right angles to the cut and split the stock in the direction of its long axis. Cut the lower end of the scion in like manner, and when the two parts are forced together the cut surfaces will fit neatly together, and one will nearly cover the other if scion and stock are of the same size. A difference may be disregarded unless it be too great. After the scion and stock have been locked together they should be wrapped with five or six turns of waxed cotton to hold the parts firmly together. It is in root grafting that the whip graft finds its distinctive field.

The roots are dug and the scions are cut in the fall and stored. The work of grafting may be done during the winter months. When the operation has been performed the grafts are packed away in moss, sawdust or sand in a cool cellar to remain until spring.

In ordinary propagation by means of whip grafts the scion is cut with about three buds, and the stock is nearly as long as the scion. The graft is so planted as to bring the union of stock and scion not very far below the surface of the ground. But where the trees are required to be especially hardy in order to stand severe winters and the roots used are not known to be so hardy as the plants from which the scions have been cut a different

ONE EVIL OF HIGH PRICED LAND.

Farmers' boys do not see their way clear to buy land at $100 an acre. They are doubtful about being able to keep interest and taxes paid on land at this price, even though they could pay half the amount at once. The very prosperity which has overtaken this generation of farmers and landowners has discouraged the oncoming generation, and the result is more land ownership by nonfarmers, more farm tenants and fewer people

In the use of heel and mallet cuttings lies in the greater certainty of developing roots. The principal drawback is that only one cutting can be made from each lateral branch.

When it is desired to make the largest number of cuttings from a limited supply of stock, cuttings are made containing but one bud each. Such cuttings are commonly started under glass with bottom heat either in greenhouse or hotbed.

Cuttings are usually made with two or more buds. The cuttings are made while the wood is dormant during the fall or early winter. As fast as made they are tied in bundles of twenty-five or fifty (butts all one way) and buried bottom end up in a trench and covered to a depth of two or three inches with sand or mellow soil. Cuttings may also be kept over winter in a cool cellar buried in sand, sawdust or moss.

The following spring cuttings are set about three inches apart in a trench with only the topmost bud or buds above the surface. The soil is then replaced in the trench and thoroughly packed. In planting, the cuttings should be exposed to light and air as little as possible. After being planted the cutting should develop roots and put forth leaves, and by the next fall or spring it should be ready to put out.

Herbaceous or soft wood cuttings are exemplified in the "slips" used to increase the numbers of house plants. This method of propagation can be employed in the winter time under glass. Herbaceous cuttings may be made from the leaf or stem.

Leaf cuttings are commonly employed in multiplying plants having thick, fleshy leaves containing a large quantity of plant food either in the body of the leaf or its larger ribs. As a general rule, in preparing slips the leaf area should be reduced to a minimum in order to lessen evaporation.

Usually an inch of broken stone or coarse gravel overlaid with one and one-half to three inches of sand will be found ample for all soft wood cuttings.

Short cuttings of the roots may be used in the propagation of many plants, especially those which show a natural tendency to sucker.

A layer is a branch so placed in contact with the earth as to induce it to throw out roots and shoots. Layering frequently proves a satisfactory method with woody plants which do not readily take root from cuttings.

All the common pomaceous fruits, the stone fruits and the citrus fruits are now multiplied by grafting or budding. A scion is a portion cut from a plant to be inserted upon another (or the same) plant, with the intention that it shall grow. Except for herbaceous grafting the wood for scions should be taken while in a dormant or resting condition. The time usually considered best is after the leaves have fallen, but before severe freezing begins. The scions are tied in bunches and buried in moist sand, where they will not freeze and yet will be kept cold enough to prevent growth. Good results often follow cutting scions in the spring just before or at the time the scion is on the scion. The graft is so planted as to bring the union of stock and scion not very far below the surface of the ground. But where the trees are required to be especially hardy in order to stand severe winters and the roots used are not known to be so hardy as the plants from which the scions have been cut a different plan is adopted. The scions are cut much longer, and the roots may be cut shorter, and the graft is planted so deep as to cause roots to issue from the lower end of the scion. When taken up to be set in the orchard the original root may be removed entirely.

Budding is one of the most economical forms of artificial reproduction, and each year witnesses its more general use.

The operation of budding is simple and can be done with great speed by expert budders. The work has usually to be done in July, August or early September. The bud should be taken from wood of the present season's growth. Since the work of budding is done during the season of active growth the bud sticks are prepared so that the petiole or stem of each leaf is left attached to serve as a handle to aid in pushing the bud home when inserting it beneath the bark of the stock. This is what is usually called a shield bud and is cut so that a small portion of the woody tissue of the branch is removed with the bud.

The stock for budding should be at least as thick as the ordinary lead pencil. The height at which buds are inserted varies; the nearer the ground the better. When the bud is made a ligature is then tightly drawn about, above and below the bud to hold it in place until a union shall be formed. Bands of raffia about eight or ten inches long make a most convenient tying material. As soon as the buds have united with the stock the ligature should be cut in order to prevent girdling the stock. This done, the operation is complete until the following spring, when all the trees in which the buds have "taken" should have the top cut off just above the bud.

The one objection to budding is that it causes an unsightly crook in the body of the tree unless the tree is planted deep in the orchard.

BEE NOTES.

Never let any grass grow around the hives for a few feet on all sides. The grass helps the troublesome insects, especially the ants.

The Italian bee has been improved by selection and careful handling until we have some strains that are very gentle. No effort has been made to improve the black or German bee.

Bees never puncture sound fruit, but if the skin is broken by some other means bees will often suck the fruit dry. In doing that, however, they are sucking fruit which is already damaged.

Provide fresh water in a shallow dish near the hive. Put chips in the water and see that the water does not dry up. Have salt where the bees can easily find it and help themselves. This salt should be protected from the rain.

Let the bees form your acquaintance. Let them alight on you at will. Never attempt to brush them off. They will do you no harm as long as you are gentle, slow in movement and keep out of the line of flight. Never use perfume on the clothing that you wear near the hive.

Easily Made Portable House For Swine Is a Great Convenience.

The Colorado experiment station describes the house shown in cut as follows:

It is eight feet wide, eight feet long and the roof is eight feet in length, making the building seven feet high.

PORTABLE HOG HOUSE.

The door in front is two and a half feet wide, three feet high and another at the back, near the top, is 12 by 18 inches. The small door may be covered with heavy muslin, admitting air and light without draft. The frame is made of 2 by 4's and is covered with drop siding. No floor is used.

When it is desired to move the building it may be tipped over on to a low wagon or stone boat. This is the house we recommend for beginners. It is cheap, and often old material can be used in building it. It is easily moved, easily disinfected and can be changed so frequently that it may be kept on clean ground, free from disease. When a sow farrows in cold weather a lantern hung to the roof will keep the building sufficiently warm.

Treating Wounds of Trees.

The Ohio station reports that two steps in pruning wound treatment of trees may be found necessary. One is the sterilization of the surface of a wound by the use of a torch or the application of an antiseptic or spore destroying substance. The other is the application of dressings to prevent the entrance of harmful spores or bacteria. One such dressing is generally sufficient. There are a large number of effective germicides, such as corrosive sublimate, gasoline, kerosene, carbolic acid, petroleum, copper sulphate and formaldehyde. The availability of any depends largely upon the nature of the wound. Protective paints have usually been applied as dressings, but, as a rule, these are very ineffective. Far better are preparations of asphaltum and resinous tars.

To Kill the Canada Thistle.

According to an Iowa press bulletin, sodium arsenite is the only chemical that will entirely destroy the Canada thistle. It is applied at the rate of one and one-half pounds to fifty-two gallons of water. It further states that a good method for the eradication of this weed is to plow shallow and cultivate frequently during the summer. After plowing the soil should be dragged and the roots exposed to the sun and removed. It may be found necessary to cut off with a hoe the stray plants.

Do we salt stock? A friend says that he salts the feed and not let the stock have access to it. His grounds are not like his. He does not like to eat unsalted feed and then go in the pantry and get salt, and he takes it that the sheep or cow is like him in this. This looks like good logic. —Progress.

Mr. Geo. S. Hinch, a former resident of Napanee, and for a number of years a resident of Winnipeg, Man., died in that city on Friday last. Mr. Hinch was caretaker of the Napanee court house for a number of years.

On Wednesday afternoon a section of the wall of the Napanee Iron Work's New boiler shop fell out. A large number of heavy boiler plates leaning against the wall pushed it out. No one was injured and the damage was not extensive.

The annual celebration of the old historic Hay Bay Church will take place on Tuesday, August 12th. Luncheon will be served by Adolphus-town Ladies Aid from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. There will be some noted speakers present and a musical programme will be provided.

The moonlight excursion under the auspices of the firemen, proved a most enjoyable and successful event. The Steamer Aletha had a full complement of passengers and together with the musical selections by the citizen's band, the sail down the bay was an ideal one. It was a perfect moonlight night, the excursion returned about eleven o'clock and everybody was pleased.

As an opening feature of the Firemen's Demonstration at Deseronto on Wednesday of next week the Oddfellows Band of Belleville will give an open air concert in the park there. The numbers selected will consist of marches, medleys and popular music generally. The visiting fire brigades are to take bands with them the next day so as to enliven the proceedings and will all appear in the street parade which starts at 1 p.m. sharp. The Napanee brigade are out to win the prize in the hose reel race, the event of the day. The men are practising at every opportunity, and the time they have made so far indicates that they have a good chance of bringing the coveted Weddell challenge cup to town with them.

tile ditcher. A public demonstration will be held on Saturday, August 2nd, at 1 p.m., on the farm of Mr. Harry Hunter. Seven acres have been selected and will be tiled. This field was selected from a list of five applicants as the most suited to a demonstration. The ditching machine weighs eleven tons, and will dig a ditch as deep as 6 feet., by going over the ground only once. The bottom of the ditch is dug true to grade ready for the tile to be laid. The field is first surveyed and stakes set up. The operator of the machine then sights ahead and can dig a level ditch bottom even through knolls and hollows.
This machine is specially fitted with caterpillar wheels, so it can work through soft spots. From 60 to 100 rods of ditch per day can be dug in good land. Farmers are invited to see the ditcher at work. A public meeting will be held in the field on August 2nd. Speeches will be given by Prof. W. H. Day, of the Ontario

SPRING 1913

We are pleased to announce that we have been appointed sole representatives in Napanee for the House of Hobberlin, tailors to the Canadian gentleman. This firm we have been informed employs a most skillful and artistic designer to whom they pay the modest sum of $8000 per annum.
Their sample outfit is the most elaborate we have ever seen from any house doing a special order business.
We KNOW their Cloths are of a high order and the range embraces every line that a good dresser could desire.
They absolutely guarantee every garment they turn out to be perfect in fit and workmanship. Money back if not satisfactory, and no grumbling.
What more could any man ask. We would be delighted to show their range of samples to any man contemplating the purchase of a new suit. If you order and the garments are not entirely satisfactory to YOU it will cost you nothing whatever but the time you spent in making your selection. We know of no fairer way of doing business.

Samples are now ready for inspection at
